

Manning Certificate in Gerontology

Online Undergraduate Certificate for a Career in the Field of Aging

The Frank J. Manning Certificate in Gerontology provides undergraduate students with an understanding of the aging network and aging process through direct service, research, field placements, and legislative advocacy for older adults. Since 1980, the Manning Certificate has equipped students with skills and resources necessary to build rewarding careers in gerontology and provides the credentials to advance for those already employed in the field.

This fully online program offers flexibility and convenience while pursuing further education with one of the world's leading aging studies departments.

Curriculum in the Manning Certificate program focuses on direct care, research, social and public policy, and advocacy to improve the growing network of age-related programs and services. Our graduates are working professionals that respond to the needs of the growing number of older people in our society. Courses for this 18 credit, six-course certificate include:

- GERON 150 Frontiers in Global Human Aging
- GERON 240 Policy and Aging
- GERON 260 Health and Physical Aspects of Aging
- GERON 325 Applied Research in Aging
- GERON 342L Aging and Society
