Minor in Aging Studies

There is huge demand for college graduates with training in aging. The Aging Studies Minor can prepare you for success on any career path.

Our rapidly aging population presents new challenges—and opportunities—in every facet of life. The Aging Studies Minor will help you understand how aging affects us individually and as a society and how it impacts every aspect of the economy. Learn about aging research, policy and advocacy, and ways to improve quality of life for older adults. This perspective will prepare you for a successful and rewarding career, no matter which professional path you choose.

Complete any four courses from the aging studies curriculum to earn the minor. All classes are online and include live chat sessions.

Minor in Aging Studies

The Aging Studies Minor will help cultivate a person-centered and compassionate approach to working with older adults, fostering empathy, cultural competence, and ethical decision-making in your interactions with older individuals, families, and communities.

Aging-related job postings have increased 75% since 2005, according to analysis by Indeed.com.
