

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Newsroom Internships

The Wall Street Journal internship program is an opportunity primarily for college juniors to work in our award-winning newsrooms in either New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco or Washington D.C. Seniors and graduate students enrolled in a degree program by the application deadline – Sunday, October 27 – are also eligible to apply.

We are seeking self-starters who understand the needs of our audience across multiple platforms and are able to work independently under deadline pressure. Dedication to high journalism standards and excellent writing and reporting skills are required.

You don't need to be an expert in business or finance to apply, but you do need to be curious and eager to learn. You should have completed at least one prior reporting internship with another professional media organization or published exceptional work with a campus news outlet or as a freelancer.

The paid internship program offers practical work experience and mentorship, plus a robust orientation and tailored training sessions. Interns are encouraged to pitch their own stories and projects and follow them through to completion with supervision and guidance from an editor.

Application links can be found at WSJ.jobs. To learn more about the internship program, visit medium.com/wsj-internships and review our FAQs.

New York:

Audience Internship, New York
Corporate Reporting Internship, New York
Dow Jones Newswires Reporting Internship, New York
Graphics Internship, New York
Life & Work Reporting Internship, New York
Photo Editor/Photographer Internship, New York
Platform & Publishing Editing Internship, New York
Podcast Internship, New York
Real Estate Reporting Internship, New York
Social Video Internship, New York

West Coast:

Corporate Reporting Internship, Technology, San Francisco
Corporate Reporting Internship, Media & Entertainment, Los Angeles