

Extended-Use License: Compensated

Granted to the University by an online course creator.

The University compensates the creator specifically for developing this course.

University to Creating and Compensated Instructor:

To develop new, high-quality online courses in a timely manner, the University may compensate instructors who create them, in which case the University will retain a permanent license to extend to other instructors a use-license for all copyrightable course materials as originally developed. Administrators may grant this use-license to any instructor on a one-time, one-course basis. The use-license does not extend to the use of materials created later for the same course by the creator. The creator retains ownership of copyright-protected material. The materials will include the name of the creator. *

Ordinarily, a dean will fill out this form and email it to the course creator. The creator will indicate agreement (☒) and email it to the Office of the Academic and Technical Coordinator of Distance Learning for archiving.

Course Creator Click here to enter text.

Course Number and Name Click here to enter text.

Original Course Term Click here to enter text.

Compensation Amount Click here to enter text.

Dean: Click here to enter name.

Date: Click here to enter date.

Creator: Click here to enter name.

Date: Click here to enter date.

- I acknowledge that the University has or will have compensated me the above amount for developing this course.
- I agree to the terms of this extended use license set forth above.

 Copyright is automatically held by the creator of materials that require significant originality—such as writings, graphics, study guides, tests, and annotations of bibliography items. Materials typically not subject to copyright include syllabi, bibliographies, course outlines, course outcomes, and assessment strategies.*

Details on this license may be found in "Copyright Guidelines" at MySiena, under QuickLinks.