

FREE SPEECH LAW FOR ON-PREMISES SIGNS

By

Daniel R. Mandelker

Stamper Professor of Law Emeritus

Washington University in Saint Louis

Fifth Edition 2024

United States Sign Council Foundation

PREFACE TO THE FOURTH EDITION

This edition of Free Speech Law for On-Premises Signs updates its discussion of free speech issues and includes cases discussed in the 2023 supplement and cases decided since that supplement was published. It contains new sections, relocated sections, and changes in some section headings. The word “premise” has been changed to “premises” throughout this edition to follow Supreme Court practice.

About the Author

Professor Daniel R. Mandelker is the Stamper Professor of Law Emeritus at Washington University in St. Louis, where he was a leading scholar and teacher of land use, state and local government, and environmental law. Professor Mandelker's publications include Street Graphics and the Law (Fifth Edition 2015), with John M. Baker and Richard Crawford, published as Planning Advisory Report No. 580 by the American Planning Association. It includes a model code for on-premises signs that has been widely followed. His publications include Billboards, Signs, Free Speech, and the First Amendment, in the Real Estate Trust, and Estate Law Journal (2020), and Decision Making in Sign Codes: The Prior Restraint Barrier, in the Zoning and Planning Law Report (Sept. 2008). He is the coauthor of a treatise on Land Use Law.

Professor Mandelker was the principal consultant for the American Planning Association's Growing Smart project, which published a Legislative Guidebook that proposed model planning and zoning legislation, and a joint American Bar Association committee that prepared a model land use procedures law adopted by the ABA House of Delegates. Mandelker received the ABA's State and Local Government Section Daniel J. Curtin Lifetime Achievement Award in 2006.

Acknowledgments

I would like to acknowledge the editorial assistance of Rachel Mance, Faculty Support Supervisor, Washington University School of Law for the Fourth and Fifth editions, the assistance of Richard Crawford, Nancy Maren, Robert Sedler, Corey Zeller, and support staff at the law school for earlier editions, and former Dean Kent Syverud for his earlier research assistance.

A Note

All statutes cited in this book are current at the time of publication. Omissions in quotations from cases are shown by an ellipsis.

St. Louis, Missouri
October 3, 2024

TABLE OF CONTENTS

CHAPTER I: AN INTRODUCTORY NOTE.....	1
§ 1:1. Why This Handbook Was Written	1
§ 1:2. What This Handbook Is About	1
§ 1:3. How to Use This Handbook	2
§ 1:4. Must a Sign Ordinance Include a Statement of Purpose	2
CHAPTER II: BASIC FREE SPEECH LAW PRINCIPLES.....	5
§ 2:1. Free Speech Principles	5
§ 2:2. Federal and State Court Decisions and What They Mean	6
§ 2:3. Commercial and Noncommercial Speech.....	7
§ 2:3[1]. The Commercial/Noncommercial Distinction	7
§ 2:3[2]. How to Decide When a Sign is Commercial or Noncommercial	7
§ 2:3[3]. Must a Sign Ordinance Define Noncommercial and Commercial Speech?	10
§ 2:3[4]. Can On-Premises Signs be Limited to Commercial Speech?	10
§ 2:3[5]. Exemptions for Noncommercial Speech	12
§ 2:4. Content Neutrality	14
§ 2:4[1]. What This Requirement Means.....	14
§ 2:4[2]. Reed v. Town of Gilbert	15
§ 2:4[3]. How Courts Apply Reed.....	19
§ 2:4[4]. City of Austin v. Reagan National Advertising of Austin	21
§ 2.44. The Case	21
§ 2.44. Off-Premises vs. On-Premises Signs	21
§ 2.44. Rules for Content-Based Speech	23
§ 2.44. Should Reagan Be Read Broadly or Narrowly?	25
§ 2.44. The Remand Decision	25
§ 2:4[5]. Does Content-Based Commercial Speech Require Strict Scrutiny?	27
§ 2:4[6]. The “Need to Read” Rule	28
§ 2:46. Before Reagan.....	28
§ 2:46. The Reagan Decision.....	31
§ 2:46. After Reagan	32

§ 2:5. Definitions.....	32
§ 2:6. Speaker-Based Neutrality	33
§ 2:7. Judicial Standards for Regulating Commercial Speech	35
§ 2:7[1]. An Overview	35
§ 2:7[2]. The Central Hudson Case	37
§ 2:7[3]. The Metromedia Case.....	38
§ 2:7[4]. Taxpayers for Vincent	42
§ 2:7[5]. Central Hudson’s “Directly Advance” Criterion.....	43
§ 2:7[6]. Are Studies or Reports Necessary to Prove That a Sign Ordinance Directly Advances Governmental Interests.....	45
§ 2:7[7]. Central Hudson’s “More Extensive than is Necessary” Criterion	49
§ 2:8. Time, Place, and Manner Regulations.....	54
§ 2:8[1]. What They Are.....	54
§ 2:8[2]. As Applied to Sign Ordinances	56
§ 2:9. The Prior Restraint Doctrine.....	59
§ 2:9[1]. General Principles.....	59
§ 2:9[2]. The Procedural Standards	60
§ 2:9[3]. The Substantive Standards	63
CHAPTER III: THE FEDERAL HIGHWAY BEAUTIFICATION ACT.....	71
§ 3:1. The Federal Highway Beautification Act	71
CHAPTER IV. SPECIALIZED ON-PREMISES SIGNS.....	74
§ 4:1. An Overview.....	74
§ 4:2. Digital Signs.....	74
§ 4:3. Flags	78
§ 4:4. Pole Signs.....	80
§ 4:5. Murals.....	82
§ 4:6. Portable and Temporary Signs	84
§ 4:6[1]. In General.....	84
§ 4:6[2]. Total Prohibition	85
§ 4:6[3]. Display, Size, and Height Limitations	88

§ 4:7. Price Signs	89
§ 4:8. Time and Temperature Signs	91
§ 4:9. Window Signs.....	92
§ 4:10. Wind Signs.....	92
CHAPTER V. REGULATIONS FOR THE DISPLAY OF ON-PREMISES SIGNS.....	94
§ 5:1. An Overview.....	94
§ 5:2. Animation, Flashing Illumination, and Changeable Signs	94
§ 5:3. Color	96
§ 5.4. Design Review.....	98
§ 5:5. Height and Size Limitations.....	99
§ 5:6. Illumination Through Lighting, Searchlights, and Neon.....	102
§ 5:7. Numerical Restrictions.....	104
§ 5.8. Setback Requirements	105

CHAPTER I: AN INTRODUCTORY NOTE

§ 1:1. Why This Handbook Was Written

Free speech law is critically important for on-premises sign regulation. Signs are an expressive form of free speech protected by the free speech clause of the Federal Constitution. Courts decide how local governments can regulate signs, including on-premises signs, to ensure that sign regulations observe free speech principles. Courts will hold a sign ordinance unconstitutional if it does not meet free speech requirements. This handbook explains the free speech principles that apply to the regulation of on-premises signs.

Free speech law need not be discouraging. Courts often classify on-premises sign messages as commercial speech and usually find the regulation of commercial speech does not present constitutional problems. On-premises sign ordinances also have constitutional support because they seldom prohibit the display of signs. Instead, sign ordinances usually allow but regulate the display of on-premises signs. Local governments can regulate signs without creating constitutional problems through content-neutral sign ordinances that are fair, objective, even-handed, and supported by accepted government purposes.

A Supreme Court case decided in 2015¹ adopted more stringent requirements for content neutrality, but local governments can meet these requirements through careful drafting and a recent Supreme Court decision modified these requirements.² The American Planning Association published a Planning Advisory Service Report, Street Graphics and the Law,³ which discusses best practices for on-premises sign regulation and includes a model ordinance that considers the problems the recent Supreme Court decision creates.

§ 1:2. What This Handbook Is About

The handbook begins Chapter II by discussing Supreme Court cases that decided the basic principles of free speech law. It then discusses the differences between commercial and noncommercial speech, and how the free speech clause protects noncommercial speech is protected under. The content neutrality requirement is discussed next, and then the principles that apply to the regulation of commercial speech. This chapter concludes with a discussion of time, place, and manner regulations and the prior restraint doctrine.

¹ Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 576 U.S. 155 (2015).

² City of Austin v. Reagan National Advertising of Austin, 596 U.S. 62 (2022).

³ Daniel R. Mandelker, John M. Baker & Richard Crawford, Street Graphics and the Law (American Planning Association, Planning Advisory Report No. 580 (5th Edition 2015), <https://tinyurl.com/manbakcr>, hereinafter Street Graphics).

Chapter III discusses the federal Highway Beautification Act. Chapter IV reviews the law that applies to different types of on-premises signs, such as time and temperature signs, portable signs, and digital signs. A final chapter discusses standards for the display of on-premises signs, such as size, height, and spacing regulations. Objective sign standards based on research, such as research conducted by the United States Sign Council Foundation, can help decide what regulations to adopt.⁴

§ 1:3. How to Use This Handbook

This handbook discusses the free speech case law that applies to the regulation of on-premises signs. There are two sets of cases. Supreme Court cases are one set. They adopt free speech principles that apply to all laws. Only a few of these cases considered sign ordinances, but all Supreme Court free speech cases may affect their constitutionality. Lower federal court cases that apply the Supreme Court's free speech cases to sign ordinances are the second set. These courts decide a significant number of sign cases, and ambiguities in Supreme Court decisions allow conflicting interpretations of Supreme Court doctrine. Courts of appeals cases are fewer in number but carry more weight. District court decisions have less precedential value because they are decided by a single judge. State court free speech decisions that apply the federal constitution are included, as are law review articles.

The text usually discusses one or two important decisions that provide a basis for understanding the topic that is discussed. The footnotes provide more detail through additional citations that support and explain the issues discussed in the text. Contrary decisions are included. Citations are intended to be complete and include unpublished decisions. Using this handbook requires judgment. Free speech law is rarely precise, and judgment is required to decide what law is relevant, and how it should be applied.

§ 1:4. Must a Sign Ordinance Include a Statement of Purpose?

Sign ordinances should include a statement of purpose.⁵ It should adequately state the ⁴ See, for example, Chapter 4 of Street Graphics, supra note 3.

⁵ See the Statement of Purpose in the Model Ordinance in Street Graphics § 1.01, supra note 3, at 70. For a case holding a statement of purpose based on earlier version of this report was not an unconstitutional delegation of power see Rodriguez v. Solis, 2 Cal. Rptr.2d 50 (Cal. App. 1991). The case did not discuss free speech issues. The statement of purpose should also state that the ordinance preserves “the right of free speech and expression in the display of aesthetics and traffic safety interests the ordinance advances. A statement of purpose plays an important role in upholding a sign ordinance in court. Some courts relied on a statement of purpose to hold, without additional proof, that a sign ordinance directly advanced its legislative purposes under the second Central Hudson criterion.⁶

If a sign ordinance does not contain a statement of purpose, some courts hold a sign ordinance cannot be justified by a governmental interest in aesthetics or traffic safety.⁷ They were not willing to take judicial notice of the legislative purposes for the ordinance and rejected after-the-fact or extrinsic justifications, such as statements in other ordinances or statutes.⁸ In National Advertising Co. v. Town of Babylon,⁹ for example, the Second Circuit held it had not found any case where “a court has taken judicial notice of an unstated and unexplained legislative purpose for an ordinance that restricts speech.” It is not clear what kind of studies are required. One court signs.”

⁶ Get Outdoors II, LLC v. City of San Diego, 506 F.3d 886 (9th Cir. 2007) (billboards; statement of purpose of sign code was “to optimize communication and quality of signs while protecting the public and the aesthetic character of the City;” that is all our review requires to prove a significant interest); Southlake Prop. Assocs., Ltd. v. City of Morrow, 112 F.3d 1114, 1116 (11th Cir. 1997) (total ban on commercial signs; relying on “Statement of Findings” to uphold ordinance); Adirondack Advert., LLC v. City of Plattsburgh, N.Y., 2013 WL 5463681, at *4 (N.D.N.Y. Sept. 30, 2013) (“Code clearly states its purpose”); Outdoor Systems, Inc. v. City of Lenexa, 67 F. Supp.2d 1231, 1238-1239 (D. Kan. 1999) (billboards; following Metromedia and accepting legislative findings that ordinance promoted governmental interests in traffic safety and aesthetics; expert opinions or other evidence not needed where common sense will logically suffice).

⁷ Desert Outdoor Adver., Inc. v. City of Moreno Valley, 103 F. 3d 814, 819 (9th Cir. 1996) (no statement to show aesthetics or safety interest; clear statement would have shown governmental interest in aesthetics and traffic safety); National Adver. Co. v. Town of Babylon, 900 F.2d 551, 555, 556 (2d Cir. 1990); International Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Romulus, 2008 WL 4792645 (E.D. Mich. 2008) (cross-references to statutes that had statements of purpose not enough); Lockridge v. City of Oldsmar, 475 F.Supp.2d 1240 (M.D. Fla. 2007); Abel v. Town of Orangetown, 759 F. Supp. 161 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (following National Advertising). See also Adams Outdoor Adver. of Atlanta, Inc. v. Fulton County, 738 F. Supp. 1431, 1433 (N.D. Ga. 1990) (“[T]his court cannot permit defendant to justify its restriction of protected speech with after the fact invocations of aesthetics and traffic safety.”); Bell v. Stafford Twp., 541 A.2d 692, 699 (N.J. 1988) (“the record is almost completely devoid of any evidence concerning what interests of Stafford are served by the ordinance and the extent to which the ordinance has advanced those interests”). Contra, Covenant Media of S.C., LLC v. Town of Surfside Beach, 321 Fed. Appx. 251 (4th Cir. 2009) (such a requirement is not implicit in Central Hudson standard).

⁸ Tinsley Media, LLC v. Pickens Cty., 203 F. App'x 268, 273–74 (11th Cir. 2006) (will not examine record); Nat'l Advert. Co. v. Town of Babylon, 900 F.2d 551, 555 (2d Cir.) (rejecting preambles and statements elsewhere in ordinances; will not take judicial notice); Int'l Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Romulus, 2008 WL 4792645, at *8 (E.D. Mich. Oct. 29, 2008) (rejecting reference to other statutes and broad statements of purpose in zoning ordinance, and statements in related ordinances in other jurisdictions); Adams Outdoor Advert. of Atlanta, Inc. v. Fulton Cty., 738 F. Supp. 1431, 1433 (N.D. Ga. 1990) (holding after the fact invocations not allowed; will not take judicial notice).

⁹ 900 F.2d 551, 555, 556 (2d Cir. 1990) (“At most, courts have taken judicial notice of a common-sense linkage between a stated governmental interest and a restriction in order to assess whether the third part of the Central Hudson test -- that a restriction directly advance the governmental interest asserted -- has been satisfied.”).

accepted affidavits from a mayor, planning commission, and others in one case.¹⁰

Zoning ordinances may also contain an all-inclusive “health, safety, and general welfare” statement of purpose that applies to the entire ordinance. Some courts hold that a general statement of purpose of this type is not enough to uphold sign regulations that are part of a zoning ordinance.¹¹ The Eleventh Circuit, however, held that a general statement of purpose in an ordinance permits a court to examine the record for evidence of a governmental interest that can support the sign regulations.¹² The court also held that a narrow reading of the general statement of purpose in that case, and the “obvious aim” of most of the measures in the sign ordinance, showed that traffic concerns partially supported the sign regulations.

¹⁰ Harp Advert. of Illinois, Inc. v. Vill. of Chicago Ridge, 1992 WL 386481, at *9 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 13, 1992) (holding affidavits and letters from mayor, planning commission and others supported village justifications). See also Nichols Media Grp., LLC v. Town of Babylon, 365 F. Supp. 2d 295, 308 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) (rejecting studies that attempted to discredit governmental justifications and holding that aesthetic and traffic safety goals unequivocally satisfy second criterion, citing Metromedia).

¹¹ National Adver. Co. v. Town of Babylon, 900 F.2d 551, 555 (2d Cir. 1990) (statements contained in other parts of code); Abel v. Town of Orangetown, 759 F. Supp. 161, 166 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (statement in preamble); Int'l Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Romulus, 8 F. Supp. 3d 1369. See also Tinsley Media, LLC v. Pickens County, 203 Fed. Appx. 268 (11th Cir. 2006) (inquiry into record not allowed when ordinance contained no all-inclusive statement of purpose). Compare Bell v. Township of Stafford, 541 A.2d 692 (N.J. 1988) (record almost completely devoid of evidence to support interests justifying billboard ban).

¹² Dills v. City of Marietta, 674 F.2d 1377 (11th Cir. 1982) (restrictions on portable signs). See also People v. Target Adver. Inc., 708 N.Y.S.2d 597 (N.Y. City Crim. Ct. 2000) (relying on general statements of purpose to uphold rule prohibiting operation of vehicles solely for purpose of displaying commercial advertising)

CHAPTER II: BASIC FREE SPEECH PRINCIPLES

§ 2:1. Free Speech Principles

Free speech is the dominant constitutional issue in sign regulation.¹³ State law dealing with aesthetic control and other issues is important, but free speech law overrides state law because sign ordinances must satisfy federal constitutional free speech doctrine. Free speech law modifies the presumption of constitutionality. A sign ordinance is a law regulating an economic activity. The presumption of constitutionality allows a legislature to make choices in laws regulating an economic activity when there is reasonable disagreement about what a law should contain. Free speech law modifies this presumption and places the burden on the government to uphold the constitutionality of a sign regulation. How free speech law limits local governments when they enact sign ordinances is a major issue that decides whether or not they are constitutional.

The standard of judicial review courts use when they review the constitutionality of sign ordinances decides when a sign ordinance is constitutional. Courts uphold economic regulation when there is a rational relationship between a law and its legislative purpose. Aesthetic and traffic safety purposes justify the enactment of sign ordinances, so a court will uphold a sign ordinance under the rational relationship standard of judicial review if it rationally relates to these purposes.

Free speech law changes the standard of judicial review that courts apply. Two alternatives are available. The Supreme Court adopted an intermediate standard of judicial review for laws that regulate commercial speech, such as sign ordinances.¹⁴ This standard of judicial review places some limits on governments, but it is possible to meet. When a law regulates the content of speech, a court applies a strict scrutiny standard of judicial review that requires a compelling governmental interest to uphold the constitutionality of a law.¹⁵ A sign ordinance that includes the message a sign can contain is a regulation of content, and courts call this kind of ordinance content-based. Strict scrutiny judicial review is usually fatal. Courts rarely, if ever, find a compelling governmental interest that justifies content-based legislation. The Supreme Court also rejects laws that treat noncommercial speech less favorably than commercial speech.

¹³ See Daniel R. Mandelker, Billboards, Signs, Free Speech, and the First Amendment, 55 Real Property, Trust and Estate Law Journal 367 (2020); Karen Zagrodny Consalo, With the Best of Intentions: First Amendment Pitfalls for Government Regulation of Signage and Noise, 46 Stetson L. Rev. 533 (2017).

¹⁴ Central Hudson Gas & Elec. Co. v. Public Service Comm'n, 447 U.S. 557 (1980).

¹⁵ § 2:4[1].

These principles are straightforward. Unfortunately, the courts do not apply them with the clarity and predictability they require. The free speech clause requires an important balancing of the constitutional interest in freedom of expression against the government's need to regulate in the public interest. Balancing these competing interests demands a sensitivity from the courts that is difficult to express in categorical bright-line rules.

§ 2:2. Federal and State Court Decisions and What They Mean

The Supreme Court is the binding voice on the constitution, but its decisions on free speech are sometimes inconsistent and contain ambiguities that lower courts find difficult to interpret. Decisions also do not have full precedential value if they do not gain a majority of the Court. Only a few of the Court's free speech decisions have considered sign ordinances, which require special attention as a tangible medium for expressing a message.¹⁶

Despite ambiguities in Supreme Court free speech law, lower federal courts provide helpful guidance on free speech principles that apply to sign ordinances, including on-premises sign regulation. There are conflicts on some issues, however, and some of them are important. To understand the role of the lower federal courts, and what these conflicts mean, it is important to understand the difference between federal district courts and federal courts of appeals in the federal court system. The courts of appeals deserve the most attention because they are appellate courts that hear appeals from single-judge district courts, which are the federal trial courts with original jurisdiction. There are eleven courts of appeals for different geographic circuits and an additional court of appeals for the District of Columbia. These courts decide cases in panels of three, which differ from case to case and may reach different conclusions on the same issue in the same circuit. An entire court of appeals en banc sometimes reconsiders panel decisions.

Decisions by a court of appeals having jurisdiction over a state in which a local government is located are controlling. Sometimes there are no court of appeals decisions in a state's circuit on a question at issue, so decisions by courts of appeals in other circuits and by federal district courts may be considered. District courts must follow decisions by the court of appeals in their circuit if there are any. When there are no court of appeals decisions that apply, a district court judge is free to apply decisions by other courts of appeals or by other district court judges.

¹⁶ Members of City Council v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 810 (1984) (“With respect to signs posted by appellees, however, it is the tangible medium of expressing the message that has the adverse impact on the appearance of the landscape.”).

State courts apply the federal free speech clause because the federal constitution is enforceable in state courts. They usually apply federal cases faithfully and have done so in on-premises sign cases. State courts are free to select from federal court of appeals and district court decisions, but federal courts do not have to follow state court decisions on federal constitution issues and seldom cite them. Better staffing and more familiarity with federal free speech law are reasons to sue in federal court, though state courts have more flexibility in choosing federal precedents.

§ 2:3. Commercial and Noncommercial Speech

§ 2:3[1]. The Commercial/Noncommercial Distinction

An important distinction in the law of sign regulation is the distinction between commercial and noncommercial speech. The Supreme Court has explained the difference between commercial and noncommercial speech, and holds that laws regulating noncommercial speech require a higher standard of judicial review:

To require a parity of constitutional protection for commercial and noncommercial speech alike could invite dilution, simply by a leveling process, of the force of the Amendment's guarantee with respect to the latter kind of speech. Rather than subject the First Amendment to such a devitalization, we instead have afforded commercial speech a limited measure of protection, commensurate with its subordinate position in the scale of First Amendment values, while allowing modes of regulation that might be impermissible in the realm of noncommercial expression.¹⁷

Courts do not allow sign ordinances to treat commercial speech more favorably than noncommercial speech.¹⁸ An example is a sign ordinance that includes more restrictive requirements for the display of noncommercial signs than it does for commercial signs, such as a smaller size requirement or a shorter display period.

§ 2:3[2]. How to Decide When a Sign is Commercial or Noncommercial

A test for deciding whether a sign ordinance regulates noncommercial or commercial speech is necessary because courts apply different standards of judicial review to each type of speech. Defining these categories of speech is difficult,¹⁹ and the Supreme Court has admitted that

¹⁷ Ohralik v. Ohio State Bar Ass'n, 436 U.S. 447, 456 (1978). See § 2:4[4] (discussing whether ordinances making the commercial/noncommercial distinction raise a content neutrality problem).

¹⁸ KH Outdoor, LLC v. City of Trussville, 458 F.3d 1261 (11th Cir. 2006); John Donnelly & Sons v. Campbell, 639 F.2d 6 (1st Cir. 1980).

¹⁹ City of Cincinnati v. Discovery Network, 507 U.S. 410, 419 (1993) (reviewing the cases that defined noncommercial

“ambiguities may exist at the margins of the category of commercial speech.”²⁰ These ambiguities are evident in a series of examples given by a Supreme Court Justice in one of its decisions.²¹ He compared a billboard containing the message “Visit Joe’s Ice Cream Shoppe” with another containing the message “Joe’s Ice Cream Shoppe Uses Only The Highest Quality Dairy Products.” The first message is commercial, while the second combines a noncommercial message about dairy products with an arguably commercial message about the store. How should the courts characterize the second message? Supreme Court tests for deciding whether speech is commercial or noncommercial, including intermingled speech as in the second example, do not give unambiguous guidance.

The Supreme Court has provided some guidance. Speech is commercial even though it contains “discussions of important public issues,”²² and does not lose its commercial character because it “links a product to a current public debate.”²³ Speech is not commercial simply because money is spent to advertise it, or because it solicits a purchase.²⁴ The Court has supplemented this guidance with more detailed tests.

The test for commercial speech most often applied by the Court is the “common-sense” distinction between speech proposing a commercial transaction, which occurs in an area traditionally subject to government regulation, and other varieties of speech.”²⁵ This test, if literally applied, means that most on-premises signs would not contain commercial speech if they contained and commercial speech and concluding that “[t]his very case illustrates the difficulty of drawing bright lines that will clearly cabin commercial speech in a distinct category.”)

²⁰ Edenfield v. Fane, 507 U.S. 761, 765 (1993). See Nat Stern, In Defense of the Imprecise Definition of Commercial Speech, 58 Md. L. Rev. 55 (1999).

²¹ Metromedia, Inc. v. City of San Diego, 453 U.S. 490, 538, 539 (1981) (Justice Blackmun, concurring).

²² Bolger v. Youngs Drug Prods. Corp., 463 U.S. 60, 67, 68 (1983). See Nat'l Experiential, LLC v. City of Chicago, 2024 WL 3757066, at *18 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 9, 2024) (message about upcoming art exhibit seems like advertising, refers to specific products and mentions artists and exhibits by name.)

²³ Central Hudson Gas & Elec. Corp. v. Public Serv. Comm'n, 447 U.S. 557, 563 n.5 (1980).

²⁴ Virginia State Bd. of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, 425 U.S. 748, 761 (1976) (citing cases).

²⁵ Ohralik v. Ohio State Bar Ass'n, 436 U.S. 447, 456 (1978). This test was first proposed in Pittsburgh Press Co. v. Pittsburgh Com. on Human Relations, 413 U.S. 376, 385 (1973), and recently confirmed in Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly, 533 U.S. 525, 554 (2001). The Court has also defined commercial speech as “expression related solely to the economic interests of the speaker and its audience.” Central Hudson, 447 U.S. at 561. Later cases have not applied this definition, however. City of Cincinnati v. Discovery Network, Inc., 507 U.S. 410, 422 (1993).

only information about a business. Price and quantity information about a product is commercial.²⁶

*Bolger v. Youngs Drug Prods. Corp.*²⁷ explains how these tests apply to intermingled speech. There the Court struck down as an unjustified regulation of commercial speech a federal law that prohibited the mailing of information about contraceptives. Most of the mailings fell within the “core notion” of commercial speech that proposes a transaction, but they also included informational pamphlets. The informational mailings were not necessarily commercial speech, though they were conceded to be advertisements, referred to a specific product, and had an economic motivation for mailing them. The combination of all these characteristics provided strong support for a conclusion that the informational mailings were commercial speech, even though they contained discussion of important public issues. “Advertisers should not be permitted to immunize false or misleading product information from government regulation simply by including references to public issues.”²⁸

The Supreme Court considered this problem again in Board of Trustees v. Fox,²⁹ where it upheld a state university regulation that did not allow “private commercial enterprises” to operate on state campuses. The university applied the regulation to prohibit a demonstration of commercial products in a student dormitory that included noncommercial topics, such as how to be financially independent and how to run an efficient home. The Court decided that the commercial and noncommercial elements were not so “inextricably commingled” that the entire presentation was noncommercial. There was nothing “inextricable” about the noncommercial aspects of the presentations. “No law of man or of nature makes it impossible to sell housewares without teaching home economics, or to teach home economics without selling housewares.”³⁰ This case indicates that a sign is commercial even though it has commercial and noncommercial messages.³¹

²⁶ Bolger v. Youngs Drug Prods. Corp., 463 U.S. 60, 66 n.12 (1983).

²⁷ 463 U.S. 60 (1983).

²⁸ Id. at 68.

²⁹ 492 U.S. 469 (1989).

³⁰ Id. at 474. The Court distinguished Riley v. National Fed’n of Blind, 487 U.S. 781 (1988), where charitable fundraising presentations were considered noncommercial speech when state law required commercial content to be “inextricably intertwined” with them.

³¹ See Int’l Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Troy, 2017 WL 2831702, at *1 (E.D. Mich. June 30, 2017) (plaintiff’s billboards displayed both commercial and noncommercial speech; court held nature of plaintiff’s billboards as a whole indicated they were commercial speech because most of the paid advertisements were commercial); PSEG Long Island LLC v.

§ 2:3[3]. Must a Sign Ordinance Define Noncommercial and Commercial Speech?

Must a sign ordinance define the distinction between commercial and noncommercial signs? The courts have held a definition is not required. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, for example, rejected an argument that a sign ordinance was unconstitutionally vague because it lacked standards and held:

Although the ordinance provides no definition of “commercial” or “noncommercial” speech, sufficient guidance is given for such determination by City officials by the various decisions of the Court relating to billboards and commercial speech. We agree with the district court that “no codification of these terms is necessary, since the Supreme Court has already defined them.”³²

Other courts agree with the Fourth Circuit.³³

§ 2:3[4]. Can On-Premises Signs be Limited to Commercial Speech?

On-premises signs are typically limited to the name of the entity that is displaying the sign, and may also describe the goods or services that are available on the site. Signs that are limited to this type of commercial message create constitutional problems. A plurality decision of the Supreme Court, now accepted as a majority decision,³⁴ held that limiting on-premises signs to commercial messages is unconstitutional.³⁵ Commercial messages connected with a site, it held, were no more valuable than noncommercial messages, and that noncommercial messages located where commercial messages are allowed could not be prohibited because they were not more threatening to traffic safety and the beauty of the city.³⁶ The cases have followed this holding.³⁷

Town of N. Hempstead, 158 F. Supp.3d 149 (E.D.N.Y. 2016) (posted utility warning signs did not serve a commercial purpose in an electricity market).

³² Major Media of Southeast, Inc. v. Raleigh, 792 F.2d 1269, 1272 (4th Cir. 1986).

³³ National Advertising Co. v. City & County of Denver, 912 F.2d 405 (10th Cir. 1990); City of Salinas v. Ryan Outdoor Advertising, 234 Cal. Rptr. 619 (Cal. App. 1987); National Advertising Co. v. Village of Downers Grove, 561 N.E.2d 1300 (Ill. App. 1990).

³⁴ City of Austin, Texas v. Reagan Nat'l Advert. of Austin, LLC, 596 U.S. 61, 73 (2022) (explaining that Parts I-IV, “the relevant portion of the opinion was also joined by a fifth”).

³⁵ Metromedia, Inc. v. City of San Diego, 453 U.S. 490, 513 (1981).

³⁶ “[T]he city may not conclude that the communication of commercial information concerning goods and services connected with a particular site is of greater value than the communication of noncommercial messages.” Metromedia, 453 U.S. at 513. The court also noted that “[t]he city does not explain how or why non-commercial billboards located in places where commercial billboards are permitted would be more threatening to safe driving or would detract more from the beauty of the city.” Id. Chief Justice Burger dissented from this holding. Id. at 567-568.

³⁷ E.g., Burkhardt Advert., Inc. v. City of Auburn, 786 F. Supp. 721, 732 (N.D. Ind. 1991); Jackson v. City Council of

This problem is easily fixed by adding a substitution clause to the sign ordinance. Remember that sign ordinances are written so that all signs permitted by the ordinance are allowed. Now assume that the ordinance allows only the display of the name of the entity that is displaying the sign on an on-premises sign. The substitution clause should provide that any sign authorized by the ordinance may display noncommercial messages.³⁸ An ordinance authorizing on-premises signs to display commercial speech would then be constitutional because the substitution clause allows the display of noncommercial messages on these signs and all signs. Ordinances authorizing the display of commercial messages if they have a substitution clause have been upheld by the courts.³⁹

City of Charlottesville, 659 F. Supp. 470, 473 (W.D. Va. 1987), order aff'd in part & vacated in part sub nom. 840 F.2d 10 (4th Cir. 1988) (Table). See also Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. Town Bd. of Town of Windham, 352 F. Supp. 2d 297, 306 (N.D.N.Y. 2005) (invalidating ban on portable signs that effectively prohibited non-commercial speech in places where it allowed commercial speech). Compare Roland Digital Media, Inc. v. City of Livingston, 2018 WL 6788594, at *5 (M.D. Tenn. Dec. 26, 2018) (“onsite exemption applies to both commercial and non-commercial speech”); Covenant Media of S.C., LLC v. City of N. Charleston, 493 F.3d 421, 434 (4th Cir. 2007) (off-premises/on-premises distinction not dependent on whether sign contained commercial or noncommercial advertising) (2008); Wheeler v. Comm’r of Highways, 822 F.2d 586, 590 (6th Cir. 1987) (state highway beautification statute content-neutral because it permitted commercial and noncommercial signs in protected areas if signs related to activity on the premises).

³⁸ Here is an example: “Signs containing noncommercial speech are permitted anywhere that advertising or business signs are permitted, subject to the same regulations that apply to such signs.” The substitution clause will not apply if the ordinance does not authorize the sign proposed for display. Johnsonville, LLC v. City of Buffalo, 2022 WL 1297835, at *2 (Minn. Ct. App. May 2, 2022).

³⁹ Outdoor Media Group, Inc. v. City of Beaumont, 506 F.3d 895, 902 (9th Cir. 2007); Nat’l Adver. Co. v. City of Miami, 402 F.3d 1329, 1135 (11th Cir. 2005) (substitution clause mooted constitutional claim); Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. City of L.A., 340 F.3d 810, 815 (9th Cir. 2003) (ordinances neutral concerning noncommercial speech because substitution clause guaranteed that political and other noncommercial messages not limited by type of sign-structure); Valley Outdoor, Inc. v. County of Riverside, 337 F.3d 1111, 1113 (9th Cir. 2003); Outdoor Sys., Inc. v. City of Mesa, 997 F.2d 604, 811 (9th Cir. 1993) (substitution clause made ordinance content-neutral as it affected noncommercial speech); Georgia Outdoor Advertising, Inc. v. Waynesville, 833 F.2d 43, 46 (4th Cir. 1987) (“any sign authorized in this chapter is allowed to contain non-commercial copy in lieu of any other copy.”); Major Media of the Southeast, Inc. v. City of Raleigh, 792 F.2d 1269, 1271 (4th Cir. 1986) (same); Adams Outdoor Advertising Limited Partnership v. City of Madison, 2020 WL 1689705, at *12 (W.D. Wis. Apr. 7, 2020); Lamar Advert. of S. Dakota, Inc. v. City of Rapid City, 2014 WL 692956 (D.S.D. 2014), order vacated in part on reconsideration on other grounds, 138 F. Supp.3d 1119 (D.S.D. 2015); Citizens for Free Speech, LLC v. County of Alameda, 62 F. Supp.3d 1129, 1139 (N.D. Cal. 2014); Lamar Advert. of Penn, LLC v. Town of Orchard Park, N.Y., 2008 WL 781865, at *15 (W.D.N.Y. Feb. 25, 2008), vacated in part, aff’d, & remanded, 356 F.3d 365 (2d Cir. 2004); Outdoor Sys. v. City of Lenexa, 67 F. Supp. 2d 1231, 1236 (D. Kan. 1999); Outdoor Sys. Inc. v. City of Atlanta, 885 F. Supp. 1572, 1579 (N.D. Ga. 1995). See City & County of San Francisco v. Eller Outdoor Advertising, 237 Cal. Rptr. 815, 822 (1987) (messages of any kind permissible if they relate to some on-premises activity); Gannett Outdoor Co. v. City of Troy, 409 N.W.2d 719, 725 (Mich. App. 1986) (accessory signs could contain noncommercial messages). See also Covenant Media of S.C., LLC v. City of N. Charleston, 493 F.3d 421, 434 (4th Cir. 2007) (off-premises/on-premises distinction not dependent on whether sign contained commercial or noncommercial advertising); Wheeler v. Commissioner of Highways, 822 F.2d 586, 590 (6th Cir. 1987) (state highway beautification statute content-neutral because it permitted commercial and non-commercial signs in protected areas if signs related to activity on the premises); National

§ 2:3[5]. Exemptions for Noncommercial Speech

The exemption problem is one of the most difficult problems in sign regulation. Sign ordinances usually exempt several signs from the sign ordinance, and it is common to exempt noncommercial on-premises noncommercial signs, such as government signs, traffic and regulatory signs, flags, seasonal banners, and signs displayed by religious and charitable organizations. Differential treatment of noncommercial signs is unconstitutional.

In *Metromedia*⁴⁰ the supreme court held twelve exemptions⁴¹ in the sign ordinance invalid because they made impermissible distinctions among different types of noncommercial speech, some of which were content-based:

Although the city may distinguish between the relative value of different categories of commercial speech, the city does not have the same range of choice in the area of noncommercial speech to evaluate the strength of, or distinguish between, various communicative interests. [Citing cases] With respect to noncommercial speech, the city may not choose the appropriate subjects for public discourse: “To allow a government the choice of permissible subjects for public

Advertising Co. v. Babylon, 703 F. Supp. 228, 240 (E.D.N.Y. 1988) (recommending adoption of substitution clause to protect constitutionality of sign ordinance). But see Beaulieu v. City of Alabaster, 454 F.3d 1219, 1233 (11th Cir. 2006) (substitution clause did not cure ordinance when political signs not treated equally). See contra, where ordinance did not include a substitution clause, Adirondack Advert., LLC v. City of Plattsburgh, N.Y., 2013 WL 5463681, at *7 (N.D.N.Y. 2013); Maldonado v. Kempton, 422 F. Supp. 2d 1169, 1175 (N.D. Cal. 2006).

⁴⁰ Metromedia, 453 U.S. at 513. This was a plurality opinion now recognized by the Court as a majority opinion, but not for that part of the opinion that decided the noncommercial speech issue. City of Austin, Texas v. Reagan Nat'l Advert. of Austin, LLC, 596 U.S. 61, 73 n.5 (2022) (explaining that Parts I-IV, “the relevant portion of the opinion was also joined by a fifth”).

⁴¹ The following signs were exempt: 1. Any sign erected and maintained pursuant to and in discharge of any governmental function or required by any law, ordinance or governmental regulation. 2. Bench signs located at designated public transit bus stops; provided, however, that such signs shall have any necessary permits required by Sections 62.0501 and 62.0502 of this Code. 3. Signs being manufactured, transported and/or stored within the City limits of the City of San Diego shall be exempt; provided, however, that such signs are not used, in any manner or form, for purposes of advertising at the place or places of manufacture or storage. 4. Commemorative plaques of recognized historical societies and organizations. 5. Religious symbols, legal holiday decorations and identification emblems of religious orders or historical societies. 6. Signs located within malls, courts, arcades, porches, patios and similar areas where such signs are not visible from any point on the boundary of the premises. 7. Signs designating the premises for sale, rent or lease; provided, however, that any such sign shall conform to all regulations of the particular zone in which it is located. 8. Public service signs limited to the depiction of time, temperature or news; provided, however, that any such sign shall conform to all regulations of the particular zone in which it is located. 9. Signs on vehicles regulated by the City that provide public transportation including, but not limited to, buses and taxicabs. 10. Signs on licensed commercial vehicles, including trailers; provided, however, that such vehicles shall not be utilized as parked or stationary outdoor display signs. 11. Temporary off-premises subdivision directional signs if permitted by a conditional use permit granted by the Zoning Administrator. 12. Temporary political campaign signs, including their supporting structures, which are erected or maintained for no longer than 90 days and which are removed within 10 days after election to which they pertain. Metromedia, at 496.

debate would be to allow that government control over the search for political truth.” [Citing case]⁴²

A substantial number of courts have followed this holding, and have held that exemptions that distinguish among noncommercial signs are invalid.⁴³ Other courts have not followed it and ⁴² Metromedia, Inc. v. City of San Diego, 453 U.S. 490, 514-515 (1981). See § 2:6[3]. The sign ordinance upheld by the Supreme Court in the Vincent case contained some of the same exemptions as those contained in the San Diego ordinance, but the Court did not discuss them. See § 2:6[4]. There are some problems with the Metromedia opinion. The ordinance exempted for sale or for rent signs, but the Supreme Court had held earlier that an ordinance prohibiting such signs was unconstitutional. Linmark v. Township of Willingboro, 431 U.S. 85 (1977), discussed in § 2:7[2]. Exemption was a logical response to that decision. The ordinance also exempted temporary political signs, but this exemption was a reasoned response to a court of appeals decision holding that restrictions on political signs were content-based and invalid. Baldwin v. Redwood City, 540 F.2d 1360 (9th Cir. 1976).

⁴³ Solantic, LLC v. City of Neptune Beach, 410 F.3d 1250 (11th Cir. 2005) (numerous exemptions, some content-based); Foti v. City of Menlo Park, 146 F.3d 629 (9th Cir. Cal. 1998); Desert Outdoor Advertising, Inc. v. City of Moreno Valley, 103 F.3d 814 (9th Cir. 1996) (official notices and directional and informational signs); Dimitt v. City of Clearwater, 985 F.2d 1565 (11th Cir. 1993) (ordinance limited permit exemptions to governmental flags); National Advertising Co. v. Town of Niagara, 942 F.2d 145 (2d Cir. 1991); National Advertising Co. v. Town of Babylon, 900 F.2d 551 (2d Cir. 1990) (but approving exemption of for sale signs); National Advertising Co. v. City of Orange, 861 F.2d 246, 249 (9th Cir. 1988) (exemptions similar to those invalidated in Metromedia); GEFT Outdoor, L.L.C. v. Monroe Cnty., 2021 WL 5494483, at *9 (S.D. Ind. Nov. 23, 2021) (governmental signs sculptures, fountains, mosaics and design features which do not incorporate advertising or identification, and temporary noncommercial signs); Int'l Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Troy, 2021 WL 2275977, at *1 (E.D. Mich. Apr. 6, 2021) (exceptions including street signs, “temporary signs,” and “flags”); Vugo, Inc. v. City of New York, 309 F. Supp.3d 139 (S.D.N.Y. 2018) (invalidating exemption for taxis and share hire liveries from ordinance prohibiting advertising in vehicles); Strict Scrutiny Media, Co. v. City of Reno, 290 F. Supp.3d 1149, 1158 (D. Nev. 2017) (exemptions for on-premises signs); International Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Troy, 2017 WL 2831702 (E.D. Mich. June 30, 2017) (variance from billboard regulations; exceptions for flags, special events, and civic events); Sweet Sage Cafe, LLC v. Town of N. Redington Beach, Fla., 2017 WL 385756 (M.D. Fla. Jan. 27, 2017) (several exemptions including exemptions for government signs); Bee's Auto, Inc. v. City of Clermont, 8 F. Supp. 3d 1369, 1380 (M.D. Fla. 2014) (ordinance identified 18 types of signs exempt from permit requirements, subject only to limitations for that type of sign; majority content-based, aff'd, (Case No. 15-10212, 11th Cir., Sept. 3, 2015); Adirondack Advert., LLC v. City of Plattsburgh, N.Y., 2013 WL 5463681, at *7 (N.D.N.Y. Sept. 30, 2013) (specified exceptions); Bowden v. Town of Cary, 754 F. Supp. 2d 794 (E.D.N.C. 2010) (giant flashing Christmas sign exempt though causes as many traffic problems as plaintiff's protest sign); Nichols Media Group, LLC v. Town of Babylon, 365 F. Supp. 2d 295 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) (broad exemption for government signs, but suggested limited exemption for government signs may be constitutional); Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. Town Bd., 352 F. Supp. 2d 297 (N.D.N.Y. 2005) (flags, pennants and insignias; exemptions from portable sign prohibition); Lamar Adver. Co. v. City of Douglasville, 254 F. Supp. 2d 1321 (N.D. Ga. 2003) (government flags); Savago v. Village of New Paltz, 214 F. Supp. 2d 252 (N.D.N.Y. 2002) (exemptions from size requirement); North Olmsted Chamber of Commerce v. City of North Olmsted, 86 F. Supp. 2d 755, 775 (N.D. Ohio 2000) (exemptions from pole sign prohibition); Revere Nat'l Corp. v. Prince George's County, 819 F. Supp. 1336 (D. Md. 1993); Lakewood v. Colfax Unlimited Assn., 634 P.2d 52 (Colo. 1981) (ideological signs); City of Tipp City v. Dakin, 929 N.E.2d 484 (Ohio Ct. App. 2010); Adams Outdoor Advertising v. Newport News, 373 S.E.2d 917 (Va. 1988). See also King Enters. v. Thomas Twp., 215 F. Supp. 2d 891 (E.D. Mich. 2002); Knoeffler v. Town of Mamakating, 87 F. Supp. 2d 322 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (ordinance exempted permanent on-site advertising, address signs, identification signs for hotels and non-dwelling buildings, and sale or rental signs without a permit, but required permit for temporary signs in the public interest, or noncommercial signs). For discussion of the pre-Reed cases see Marc Rohr, De Minimis Content Discrimination: The Vexing Matter of Sign-Ordinance Exemptions, 7 Elon L. Rev. 327 (2015).

have upheld sign ordinances that included similar exemptions.⁴⁴ Chief Justice Burger’s dissent in Metromedia caustically criticized this holding as bizarre. Metromedia did not consider problems raised by the content-based character of some of these signs.

§ 2:4. Content Neutrality

§ 2:4[1]. What This Requirement Means

Sign ordinances affect free speech and must be content-neutral, which means that they cannot be content-based. Most on-premises sign ordinances do not regulate content because they regulate how signs are displayed, such as the size, number, and height of signs. Problems arise if an on-premises sign ordinance violates the neutrality requirement.⁴⁵ Two types of neutrality are required: viewpoint neutrality and content neutrality.⁴⁶ A sign ordinance violates viewpoint neutrality if it regulates a point of view.⁴⁷ An example is a sign ordinance that prohibits signs that oppose the hunting of whales. A sign ordinance violates content neutrality if it regulates the content

⁴⁴ Wag More Dogs, LLC v. Cozart, 680 F.3d 359, 368 (4th Cir. 2012) (15 types of signs exempt); Stott Outdoor Advert. v. Cty. of Monterey, 601 F. Supp. 2d 1143, 1156 (N.D. Cal. 2009) (“no contention or showing that the ordinance improperly restricted noncommercial speech more stringently than commercial speech”); Lavey v. City of Two Rivers, 171 F.3d 1110, 1116 (7th Cir. 1999) (exemptions fully justified; city need not develop voluminous record to justify such common-sense exemptions); ArchitectureArt, LLC v. City of San Diego, 231 F. Supp.3d 828, 839 (S.D. Cal. 2017) (mural exception applied to artwork that does not contain “copy, advertising symbols, lettering, [or] trademarks,” public interest signs); Signs for Jesus v. Town of Pembroke, 230 F. Supp.3d 49 (D.N.H. 2017) (government uses exempted by state law); Scadron v. City of Des Plaines, 734 F. Supp. 1437, 1445 (N.D. Ill. 1990) (holding argument rejected “for reasons stated in the concurring and dissenting opinions” in Metromedia), aff’d on the analysis adopted in the district court, 1993 WL 64838, 989 F.2d 502 (7th Cir. 1993) (Table); Nat’l Advert. Co. v. City of Bridgeton, 626 F. Supp. 837, 838 (E.D. Mo. 1985) (Street Graphics Model Ordinance, noting but not invalidating exemptions); City & County of San Francisco v. Eller Outdoor Adver., 237 Cal. Rptr. 815 (Cal. Ct. App. 1987) (exceptions broad enough to include most noncommercial signs); Sackllah Invs. v. Charter Northville, 2011 WL 3476808 (Mich. Ct. App. 2011) (exemptions upheld). See also Messer v. Douglasville, 975 F.2d 1505 (11th Cir. 1992) (upholding exemptions from permit requirement); Adams Outdoor Advertising Limited Partnership v. City of Madison, 2020 WL 1689705, at *12 (W.D. Wis. Apr. 7, 2020) (rejecting argument that ordinance systematically disfavored noncommercial speech because nonprofits had fewer resources to spend on communicating noncommercial messages than for-profit counterparts); Pigg v. State Dep’t of Highways, 746 P.2d 961, 969 (Colo. 1987) (holding hardship-based exemption for nonconforming tourist-related signs did not unconstitutionally discriminate in favor of tourist-related advertising devices).

⁴⁵ But see City of Ladue v. Gilleo, 512 U.S. 43 (1994) (invalidating ordinance that prohibited display of message sign in window of residence; content neutrality rule not applied).

⁴⁶ See Dan V. Koslowski, Content and Viewpoint Discrimination: Malleable Terms Beget Malleable Doctrine, 13 Comm. L. & Pol’y 131 (2008); Susan H. Williams, Content Discrimination and the First Amendment, 139 U. Pa. L. Rev. 615 (1991).

⁴⁷ See Nat’l Experiential, LLC v. City of Chicago, 2024 WL 3757066, at *15 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 9, 2024) (preserving claim that decision by city to light up one building and not another is viewpoint discrimination). Members of City Council v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789 (1984), suggested that sign ordinances need only be viewpoint neutral, but this suggestion has not been followed.

of a sign. An example is a sign ordinance that prohibits any sign about whales.⁴⁸

The neutrality principle has important consequences because a high standard of strict scrutiny judicial review applies to content-based regulations of noncommercial speech.⁴⁹ Strict scrutiny is demanding judicial review because courts apply a presumption of unconstitutionality to content-based regulations. This standard of judicial review requires that the “regulation is necessary to serve a compelling state interest and that it is narrowly drawn to achieve that end.”⁵⁰ The Supreme Court has held that the traffic safety and aesthetic interests that usually justify sign ordinances satisfy intermediate scrutiny review,⁵¹ but the courts have not held that aesthetics and traffic safety are compelling interests that satisfy strict scrutiny review.⁵² Because courts seldom find a narrowly tailored compelling interest sufficient to justify a content-based regulation of speech, this standard of judicial review is usually strict scrutiny in theory, but fatal in fact.⁵³ A less-burdensome alternative to the regulation is required if it is available, and a law must leave ample alternate means of communication open.⁵⁴

§ 2:4[2]. Reed v. Town of Gilbert

Reed v. Town of Gilbert,⁵⁵ an opinion by Justice Thomas, provides important guidance for ⁴⁸ See, e.g., XXL of Ohio, Inc. v. City of Broadview Heights, 341 F. Supp. 2d 765 (N.D. Ohio 2004) (“Whether, where, when, and how signs may be erected and maintained differ according to the sign’s content-based use type;” content restrictions did not pass strict scrutiny and were not narrowly tailored..

⁴⁹ Sugarman v. Village of Chester, 192 F. Supp. 2d 282 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (political signs; held unconstitutional). A court need not decide this issue if “the outcome is the same whether a special commercial speech inquiry or a stricter form of judicial scrutiny is applied.” Sorrell v. IMS Health Inc., 564 U.S. 552, 571 (2011).

⁵⁰ Boos v. Barry, 485 U.S. 312, 321 (1988).

⁵¹ § 2:6[3].

⁵² Camp Hill Borough Republican Ass'n v. Borough of Camp Hill, 101 F.4th 266, 271 (3d Cir. 2024) (holding differential treatment of content-based signs unconstitutional); Cent. Radio Co. Inc. v. City of Norfolk, 811 F.3d 625, 633–34 (4th Cir. 2016) (distinctions between flags); Knutson v. City of Oklahoma City, 402 F. Supp. 3d 1266, 1275 (W.D. Okla. 2019) (exemptions). See also Nat'l Advert. Co. v. City of Orange, 861 F.2d 246, 249 (9th Cir. 1988) (exemptions of noncommercial content). Contra Fanning v. City of Shavano Park, Texas, 2019 WL 7284945, at *10 (W.D. Tex. Dec. 19, 2019) (ordinance allowing banners for one week during year held content-based; city of 3000 puts a central focus on its appearance, beauty, and charm).

⁵³ Professor Gerald Gunther coined the phrase. See The Supreme Court, 1971 Term --Foreword: In Search of Evolving Doctrine on a Changing Court: A Model for Newer Equal Protection, 86 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 8 (1972); Tamara R. Piety, “A Necessary Cost of Freedom”? The Incoherence of Sorrell v. Ims, 64 Ala. L. Rev. 1, 54 (2012) judicial review of content-based sign ordinances that strengthen free speech protection. This section explains the decision in Reed, which the Supreme Court later qualified in City of Austin v. Reagan Nat'l Advert. of Austin.⁵⁶

⁵⁴ United States v. Playboy Entm’t Group, 529 U.S. 803, 813 (2000).

A sign ordinance required a permit for signs but exempted twenty-three categories of signs from the permit requirement and applied different requirements to each category. Exempt categories included ideological signs, political signs, and Temporary Directional Signs Relating to a Qualifying Event. A church, which had no building and met in different temporary locations, frequently placed signs in the public right-of-way indicating when it would hold services. The town cited the church twice for violating the code, partly because the church exceeded the time limits allowed for display. Litigation followed, and the Court held that the different restrictions the ordinance applied to these signs violated the free speech clause.⁵⁷

Reversing the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, which upheld the exemptions, the Supreme Court held that courts must determine content neutrality on the face of an ordinance. It explained that because this ordinance was a “paradigmatic example of content-based discrimination,”⁵⁸ the commonsense meaning of content-based regulation requires courts to consider whether a ⁵⁵ 576 U.S. 155 (2015). For discussion, see Brian J. Connolly & Alan C. Weinstein, Sign Regulation After Reed: Suggestions for Coping with Legal Uncertainty, 47 Urb. Law. 569 (2015); Sarah Adams-Schoen, Reed Applied: The Sign Apocalypse or Another Bump in the Road, Zoning and Planning Law Report, vol. 39, no. 7 (2016); Genevieve Lakier, Reed V Town of Gilbert, Arizona, and the Rise of the Anticlassificatory First Amendment, 2016 Sup. Ct. Rev. 233 (2016); James Andrew Howard, Salvaging Commercial Speech Doctrine: Reconciling Reed v. Town of Gilbert with Constitutional Free Speech Tradition, 27 Geo. Mason U. Civ. Rts. L.J. 239 (2017); Kolby P. Marchand, Free Speech and Signage After Reed v. Town of Gilbert: Signs of Change from the Bayou State, 44 S.U. L. Rev. 181 (2017); Lee Mason, Content Neutrality and Commercial Speech Doctrine After Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 84 U. Chi. L. Rev. 955 (2017); Minch Minchin, A Doctrine at Risk: Content Neutrality in A Post-Reed Landscape, 22 Comm. L. & Pol'y 123 (2017); Enrique Armijo, Reed v. Town of Gilbert: Relax, Everybody, 58 B.C. L. Rev. 65, 66 (2017); Note, Leah K. Bradley, Lawn Sign Litigation: What Makes a Statute Content-based for First Amendment purposes? 21 Suffolk J. Trial & App. Advoc. 320-344 (2016); Dan V. Kozlowski & Derigan Silver, Measuring Reed's Reach: Content Discrimination in the U.S. Circuit Courts of Appeals After Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 24 Comm. L. & Pol'y 191 (2019); David L. Hudson, Jr., The Content-Discrimination Principle and the Impact of Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 70 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 259 (2019); Daniel R. Mandelker, Billboards, Signs, Free Speech, and the First Amendment, 55 Real Prop. Tr. & Est. L.J. 367, 415-430 (2020) (discussing Reed v. Town of Gilbert); Susan L. Trevarthen & Adam M. Hapner, The True Impact of Reed v. Town of Gilbert on Sign Regulation, 49 Stetson L. Rev. 509 (2020). Note, Free Speech Doctrine After Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 129 Harv. L. Rev. 1981 (2016). See also 24 A.L.R.7th Art. 6 (2017) (discussing cases applying Reed).

⁵⁶ 596 U.S. 61 (2022). See § 2:4[4].

⁵⁷ For example, ideological signs could be up to twenty square feet and displayed in all zoning districts without time limits. Political signs could be “up to 16 square feet on residential property and up to 32 square feet on nonresidential property, undeveloped municipal property, and ‘rights-of-way.’” Reed, 576 U.S. at 160..

⁵⁸ Reed, 576 U.S. at 169.

regulation of speech on its face draws distinctions based on the message a speaker conveys:

Some facial distinctions based on a message are obvious, defining regulated speech by particular subject matter, and others are more subtle, defining regulated speech by its function or purpose. Both are distinctions drawn based on the message a speaker conveys, and, therefore, are subject to strict scrutiny.⁵⁹

A separate and different category of laws, though facially neutral, was content-based if it cannot be “justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech,”⁶⁰ or if they were adopted by the government “because of disagreement with the message [the speech] conveys.”⁶¹ The first rule inverted a “purpose-based” rule several circuits previously adopted that upheld sign ordinances if they could be justified without reference to content.⁶²

The Court in Reed decided that the sign code was content-based on its face, as its definition of a sign depended on its communicative content. One example was the code’s definition of a political sign as a sign whose message was “designed to influence the outcome of an election.” Event signs allowed by the ordinance also were content-based, such as the display of political signs before and after an election. This type of sign, “because it conveys an idea about a specific event,” was as content-based as a regulation that targets a sign because of its ideas.⁶³ Although the Court did not discuss this issue, this holding covers other types of event signs such as a temporary sign with a “grand opening message.”

⁵⁹ Id. at 163.

⁶⁰ Id. at 159-160.

⁶¹ Citing Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791 (1989).

⁶² Wag More Dogs Liab. Corp. v. Cozart, 680 F.3d 359, 368 (4th Cir. 2012) (ordinance imposed size requirements on “business signs” that did not similarly apply to noncommercial signs and exempted fifteen types of signs; ordinance enacted, among other aims, to promote traffic safety and county’s aesthetics, interests unrelated to messages displayed); H.D.V.-Greektown, LLC v. City of Detroit, 568 F.3d 609, 622 (6th Cir. 2009) (time limits, lack of standards; “nothing in the record to indicate that the distinctions between the various types of signs reflect a meaningful preference for one type of speech over another”). A competing test held that laws are content-based if they make facial content-based distinctions. Outdoor Media Grp., Inc. v. City of Beaumont, 506 F.3d 895, 906 (9th Cir. 2007) (ordinance may have impermissibly regulated noncommercial speech on basis of content by exempting certain noncommercial off-site signs from the permit requirement); Nat’l Advert. Co. v. Town of Babylon, 900 F.2d 551, 557 (2d Cir.) (exemptions impermissibly discriminate between types of noncommercial speech based on content) (1990). See Genevieve Lakier, Reed v. Town of Gilbert, Arizona, and the Rise of the Anticlassificatory First Amendment, 2016 Sup. Ct. Rev. 233, 238-250 (2016).

⁶³ Reed, 576 U.S. at 171.

Reed rejected any reasons for holding that a sign ordinance with content was not content-based. The strict scrutiny review required for content-based ordinances applies despite a government's benign motive, a content-neutral reason for the ordinance, or a lack of animus toward the ideas contained in the speech. "[A]n innocuous justification cannot transform a facially content-based law into one that is content neutral."⁶⁴ Neither was the ordinance content-neutral because it was viewpoint-neutral.⁶⁵ The Court also considered whether an ordinance is content-based if it is speaker-based, a topic discussed below.⁶⁶

These rules for deciding when an ordinance is content-based are ambiguous and difficult to apply. Reed adopted additional rules for deciding when a sign ordinance is content-based, and these rules are discussed later as part of the review of the Reagan case.

Having decided the ordinance was content-based, the Court next applied strict scrutiny review. It rejected the aesthetic and traffic safety interests the town asserted. Assuming they were compelling, the Court held the code's distinctions among different types of signs were "hopelessly under-inclusive."⁶⁷ The code allowed an unlimited proliferation of the larger ideological signs but strictly limited the number, size, and duration of the smaller directional signs. The Town could not claim that placing strict limits on temporary directional signs was necessary to beautify the town while allowing an unlimited number of other types of signs that created the same problem. Aesthetically, temporary signs were no greater an eyesore than political and ideological signs, yet the ordinance allowed the unlimited proliferation of the larger ideological signs but strictly limited the number, size, and duration of the smaller directional ones. Neither did the town show that limiting the display of temporary directional signs was necessary for traffic safety, but that limiting the display of other types of signs for this reason was unnecessary. The town had "ample content-neutral options available" to deal with safety and aesthetics problems.⁶⁸

⁶⁴ Reed, 576 U.S. at 156. The Court interpreted an earlier case to mean that government purpose is relevant only when a law is content-neutral.

⁶⁵ Id. at 168. An earlier decision suggested that viewpoint neutrality was enough. Members of City Council v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 804 (1984) (noting general principle that free speech clause requires only viewpoint neutrality), applied in Messer v. City of Douglasville, 975 F.2d 1505, 1509 (11th Cir. 1992).

⁶⁶ See § 2:5.

⁶⁷ Reed, 576 U.S. at 171.

⁶⁸ Id. at 173. These included regulating a sign's message: size, building materials, lighting, moving parts, and portability, and regulating signs on public property.

Justice Alito, in a concurring opinion,⁶⁹ provided some relief from the majority opinion by offering examples of sign regulations that could meet Reed’s test for content neutrality. They included rules regulating the size, location, and placement of signs, which are regulations commonly applied to on-premises signs. Justice Alito’s opinion is concurring, and not controlling.⁷⁰

§ 2:4[3]. How Courts Apply Reed

This section first discusses cases decided before the Supreme Court’s decision in City of Austin v. Reagan National Advertising of Austin,⁷¹ which modified the rules adopted in Reed for content-based sign regulations. These cases struck down content-based sign ordinances that applied different requirements to different kinds of commercial speech,⁷² sign ordinances that discriminated against noncommercial speech,⁷³ and content-based regulations of speech.⁷⁴

⁶⁹ Reed, 576 U.S. at 174 (Alito, J., concurring). Here is the complete list:

Rules regulating the size of signs. These rules may distinguish among signs based on any content-neutral criteria, including any relevant criteria listed below. Rules regulating the locations in which signs may be placed. These rules may distinguish between free-standing signs and those attached to buildings. Rules distinguishing between lighted and unlighted signs. Rules distinguishing between signs with fixed messages and electronic signs with messages that change. Rules that distinguish between the placement of signs on private and public property. Rules distinguishing between the placement of signs on commercial and residential property. Rules distinguishing between on-premises and off-premises signs. Rules restricting the total number of signs allowed per mile of roadway. Rules imposing time restrictions on signs advertising a one-time event. Rules of this nature do not discriminate based on topic or subject and are akin to rules restricting the times within which oral speech or music is allowed. Id.

Despite Justice Alito’s suggestion, rules “imposing time restrictions on signs advertising a one-time event” are content-based under the majority opinion.

⁷⁰ Separate concurring opinions agreed with the judgment but expressed concern about the majority opinion’s absolute rule.

⁷¹ 596 U.S. 61(2022).

⁷² Knutson v. City of Oklahoma City, 402 F. Supp. 3d 1266, 1275 (W.D. Okla. 2019) (“Commercial or industrial real estate signs are given more favorable treatment than residential real estate or construction signs”);

⁷³ Knutson v. City of Oklahoma City, 402 F. Supp. 3d 1266, 1275 (W.D. Okla. 2019) (commercial signs given more preferential treatment than residential expressive signs, which are allowed only in residential areas); Geft Outdoor LLC v. Consol. City of Indianapolis & Cty. of Marion, Indiana, 187 F. Supp. 3d 1002, 1013 (S.D. Ind. 2016) (noncommercial opinion signs subject to restrictions different from other sign types that also received exemptions); Marin v. Town of Southeast, 136 F. Supp. 3d 548 (S.D.N.Y. 2015) (many signs exempt from restrictions on political signs, or subject to less stringent restrictions, including contractor and construction signs, portable business signs, “for sale” signs, holiday decorations, road signs advertising agricultural produce, and others).

⁷⁴ Boyer v. City of Simi Valley, 978 F.3d 618, 624 (9th Cir. 2020) (exempting certain authorized vehicles from ban on mobile billboard advertising displays held content-based and unconstitutional); Wagner v. City of Garfield Heights, 675 F. App’x 599, 607 (6th Cir. 2017) (noncommercial opinion signs subject to restrictions different from other sign

Courts approved ordinances that contained different requirements for different types of commercial signs,⁷⁵ standards for conditional uses,⁷⁶ regulations for temporary signs,⁷⁷ and exemptions for government signs.⁷⁸ Courts since Reed also struck down sign ordinances because they did not meet the narrow tailoring requirement.⁷⁹ types that also received exemptions); GEFT Outdoor, L.L.C. v. City of Westfield, 491 F. Supp. 3d 387, 406 (S.D. Ind. 2020) (invalidating exemptions based on a sign's communicative content that regulated speech based on a message's function or purpose, such as flags, text or logos on gasoline pumps or ATM machines, and non-permanent, on-premises signs; must determine purpose to decide whether sign is exempt from permit requirement); Reagan Nat'l Advert. of Austin, Inc. v. City of Cedar Park, 387 F. Supp.3d 703, 714 (W.D. Tex. 2019) (content-based regulation imposed on off-premises signs); www.RicardoPacheco.com v. City of Baldwin Park, 2017 WL 2962772, at *8 (C.D. Cal. July 10, 2017) (preferences for special event and business signs speaker-based; additional flag provision for some holidays and additional election sign provision content-based); International Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Troy, 2017 WL 2831702 (E.D. Mich. June 30, 2017) (variance from billboard regulations; ordinance listed eight examples of temporary signs on basis of content before stating time restriction; exceptions for flags, special events, and civic events); Sweet Sage Cafe, LLC v. Town of N. Redington Beach, Fla., 2017 WL 385756 (M.D. Fla. Jan. 27, 2017) (ordinance exempted numerous categories of signs from permit requirement, such as government signs, holiday and seasonal signs, political campaign signs, and warning signs; exterior of restaurant decorated to create “Key West” style atmosphere and showcase owners' sense of humor); Grieve v. Vill. of Perry, 2016 WL 4491713 (W.D.N.Y. Aug. 3, 2016), report and recommendation adopted, 2016 WL 4478683 (W.D.N.Y. Aug. 25, 2016) (plaintiff posted protest signs on his property; code allowed display of several types of commercial signs without permit but required permits for display of noncommercial signs). But see Seitz v. East Nottingham Township, 2017 WL 2264637 (E.D. Pa. May 24, 2017) (rejecting argument that ordinance conferred special treatment for signs advertising Christmas trees).

⁷⁵ Shaw v. City of Bedford, 262 F. Supp.2d 754 (S.D. Ind. 2017) (upholding ordinance limiting display of permanently-affixed signs in residential areas solely to entrances of residential developments, and exempting slightly larger flags from height and setback requirements).

⁷⁶ Conteers LLC v. City of Akron, 2020 WL 5529656, at *9 (N.D. Ohio Sept. 15, 2020) (conditional use standards held content neutral).

⁷⁷ Baldwin Park Free Speech Coal. v. City of Baldwin Park, 843 F. App'x 21, 23 (9th Cir. 2021) (temporary sign ordinances held content-neutral and narrowly tailored; interests in traffic safety and aesthetics were significant and not diminished by permit-exempt and special sign rules; ordinance narrowly tailored, requirement that an applicant submit a “drawing or photograph of the proposed temporary sign” to show “[h]eight, [w]idth and [l]anguage” upheld).

⁷⁸ Bruce & Tanya & Assocs., Inc. v. Bd. of Supervisors of Fairfax Cty., Virginia, 2021 WL 1854750, at *5 (4th Cir. May 10, 2021) (upholding exemption of government signs); Signs for Jesus v. Town of Pembroke, NH, 977 F.3d 93, 104 (1st Cir. 2020) (same, citing cases). Justice Alito, in his concurrence in Reed, explained that “government entities may also erect their own signs consistent with the principles that allow governmental speech” and that “[t]hey may put up all manner of signs to promote safety.” Reed, 576 U.S., at 175.

⁷⁹ Wagner v. City of Garfield Heights, 675 F. App'x 599, 607 (6th Cir. 2017) (political sign regulation); Cent. Radio Co. Inc. v. City of Norfolk, 811 F.3d 625, 634 (4th Cir. 2016) (exemptions); Knutson v. City of Oklahoma City, 402 F. Supp. 3d 1266, 1275–76 (W.D. Okla. 2019) (different treatment of different kinds of signs); Geft Outdoor LLC v. Consol. City of Indianapolis & Cty. of Marion, Indiana, 187 F. Supp. 3d 1002, 1014–15 (S.D. Ind. 2016) (opinion signs, exempted signs); Contra Fanning v. City of Shavano Park, Texas, 2019 WL 7284945, at *10 (W.D. Tex. Dec. 19, 2019) (“If the City believes banner signs damage its interest in the aesthetics of its community and excludes such signs for 51 weeks out of the year, then the restriction can hardly be more narrowly drawn.”). See also Lone Star Sec. & Video, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles, 827 F.3d 1192, 1201 (9th Cir. 2016) (mobile advertising ordinances not content-based, narrowly drawn).

The courts applied Reed after the Reagan decision. They held that different permit requirements based on the content of a sign were content-based⁸⁰ and that a sign ordinance that imposed a stricter time limit on noncommercial event-based signs than on commercial ones and limited how many temporary signs could express nonholiday messages but not how many could express holiday messages, did not survive strict scrutiny because it was not narrowly tailored to achieve the city’s interests in traffic safety and aesthetics.⁸¹ A district court held that an ordinance requiring the approval of a special event sign was content-neutral.⁸²

The Model Ordinance in *Street Graphics and the Law*⁸³ contains definitions and regulations for signs that meet the requirements of Reed.

§ 2:4[4]. City of Austin v. Reagan National Advertising of Austin

§ 2:44. The Case

*City of Austin v. Reagan National Advertising of Austin*⁸⁴ is an important Supreme Court case that held that the distinction between off-premises and on-premises signs that is common to sign ordinances is constitutional. It also reconfigured the rules governing content-based speech that the Court adopted in the Reed case.⁸⁵

§ 2:44. Off-Premises vs. On-Premises Signs

Off-premises signs are signs whose owners receive compensation to display signs for businesses not located on the premises. On-premises signs are signs that advertise businesses on the premises but cannot be limited to commercial uses. The different treatment of off-premises and on-premises signs has always been troublesome because both types of signs can be aesthetically ⁸⁰ Florek v. Bedora, 2023 WL 2808313, at *3 (E.D. Wis. Apr. 6, 2023).

⁸¹ Camp Hill Borough Republican Ass’n v. Borough of Camp Hill, 101 F.4th 266 (3d Cir. 2024).

⁸² Crawford v. City of Myrtle Beach, 2024 WL 3971109, at *2 (D.S.C. May 13, 2024).

⁸³ Street Graphics Model Ordinance, in Street Graphics, supra note 3, at 66. The model ordinance does not define Grand Opening signs, as that definition would be content-based. For a case rejecting free speech objections to a sign ordinance based on an earlier version of this model see National Advertising Co. v. City of Bridgeton, 626 F. Supp. 837 (E.D. Mo. 1985).

⁸⁴ 596 U.S. 61 (2022).

⁸⁵ The dissent indicated that there was agreement that the “justified without reference to the content rule” was not an issue in the case. Reagan, 596 U.S. at 88 n.2.

offensive. Metromedia held that allowing the display of on-premises signs did not undercut the justification for a prohibition on billboards but did not discuss free speech problems.⁸⁶

*City of Austin v. Reagan National Advertising of Austin*⁸⁷ held that the distinction between off-premises and on-premises signs was not content-based.⁸⁸ Justice Sotomayor upheld a sign ordinance that treated off-premises and on-premises signs differently based on a definition of off-premises signs that is commonly used but was claimed to be content-based. Off-premises signs include billboards. “[O]ff-premises sign” were distinguished from on-premises signs because they were defined to mean “a sign advertising a business, person, activity, goods, products, or services not located on the site where the sign is installed, or that directs persons to any location not on that site.” The ordinance prohibited new off-premises signs but grandfathered existing off-premises signs. A grandfathered sign could not be digitized but on-premises signs could be digitized, which permitted electronically controlled changeable-copy. Reagan National applied for but was refused permission to digitize its grandfathered signs and sued claiming a free speech clause violation. Because the ordinance applied to noncommercial as well as commercial speech, the Court had to consider whether it was content-based.

Justice Sotomayor held that the off-premises sign definition was not content-based. The Court had always recognized this distinction and it was confirmed by history and practice. She found a regulatory tradition that supported the different treatment of signs “that promote ideas, products, or services located elsewhere and those that promote or identify things located onsite.”⁸⁹ “Tens of thousands of municipalities nationwide” have analogous distinctions in their sign codes, she added, and the distinction between off-premises and on-premises signs is similar to ordinary time, place, or manner restrictions. This decision makes many of the post-Reed content-based decisions questionable.

Justice Sotomayor remanded the case because she held that the first amendment inquiry is not ended even if a law is content-neutral. There may be evidence of an impermissible purpose or ⁸⁶ § 2:7[3].

⁸⁷ 596 U.S. 61 (2022).

⁸⁸ See § 5:1 for discussion of free speech issues raised by the off-premises vs. on-premises sign distinction in the federal Highway Beautification Act, 23 U.S.C. § 131, which has been adopted by two-thirds of the states.

⁸⁹ She noted that the different treatment of off-premises and on-premises signs proliferated with the adoption of the federal Highway Beautification Act of 1965s justification, and a restriction on freedom of speech or expression must be “narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest,” one of the requirements for time, place, and manner regulations. They must also leave alternate channels of communication open, a requirement she did not mention. She also did not mention the other rules for content-based speech that she quoted from Reed.

Courts have followed the decision in Reagan on off-premises and on-premises signs.⁹⁰

§ 2:44. Rules for Content-Based Speech

Justice Sotomayor reconfigured the rules for content-based speech the Court adopted in Reed, and distinguished Reed on its facts as “a very different regulatory scheme” that applied “distinct size, placement, and time restrictions” to twenty-three different types of signs, with some signs regulated more restrictively than others. She noted that the Court in Reed “focused its analysis on three categories defined by whether the signs displayed ideological, political, or certain temporary directional messages,” and discussed the signs that received either favorable or unfavorable treatment.⁹¹

Justice Sotomayor emphasized that she did not “nullify” Reed’s protections, but quoted rules from the Reed decision that defined content-based speech in different ways. One of these rules held that the ordinance in Reed was content-based because it “singl[ed] out specific subject matter for differential treatment,” and because its restrictions were a “prohibition of public discussion of an entire topic.” Another rule held that a regulation of speech is content-based if it “applies to particular speech because of the topic discussed or the idea or message expressed.” Another held that the city’s distinction, of off-premises signs, was content-neutral because it did not have a content-based purpose or justification. At another point in her opinion, Justice Sotomayor also said that “[a] sign’s substantive message itself is irrelevant to the application of the provisions; there are no content-discriminatory classifications” for political or other messages.

Reed adopted another rule that is quoted but not discussed by Justice Sotomayor that turns ⁹⁰ Adams Outdoor Advertising Ltd. Partnership v. City of Madison, 56 F.4th 1111 (7th Cir. 2023) (off-premises vs. on-premises distinction held content neutral); Yellow Dog Ltd. v. City of Huron, 2024 WL 1698035, at *2 (N.D. Ohio Mar. 1, 2024) (no likelihood of success on the merits in case challenging off-premises sign ban).

⁹¹ Justice Sotomayor also discussed Reed’s holding that an ordinance does not have to be viewpoint neutral to be unconstitutional. She quoted Reed as holding that By treating some messages differently from other messages, the sign ordinance singled out “specific subject matter for differential treatment, even if it [did] not target viewpoints within that subject matter.” [Citing case] on facial distinctions and that could have been applied to the off-premises sign definition in Reagan. It holds that “[s]ome facial distinctions based on a message are obvious, defining regulated speech by particular subject matter.” The off-premises sign definition in the Austin sign code could have been held content-based under the obvious facial distinction rule because it clearly defined the content of a sign.

This rule added that other distinctions “are more subtle, defining regulated speech by its function or purpose,” and the sign company argued that the sign code was content-based because it defined off-premises signs based on their function or purpose. Justice Sotomayor disagreed. Their argument took the rule too far, as this rule was intended only to address subtler forms of discrimination. It means only that a law cannot escape classification as content-based “simply by swapping an obvious subject-matter distinction for a ‘function or purpose’ proxy that achieves the same result,” though not every function or purpose classification is content-based.

These conflicting statements are difficult to reconcile; perhaps all of these rules apply. The quotations selected by Justice Sotomayor suggest alternatively that speech is content-based if a topic or idea is discussed, if there is a targeting or prohibition of discussion if there is targeting of subject matter for special treatment, or if there is a content-based purpose or justification. Her statement that a “sign’s substantive message itself is irrelevant” is puzzling.

The courts have followed Reagan to hold that a sign ordinance that prohibited off-premises signs⁹² was not content-based and that a location-based distinction between off-premises signs and on-premises signs was not content-based.⁹³ Additional cases upholding the off-premises v. on-premises distinction are collected in the footnote.⁹⁴ However, A sign ordinance that imposed a ⁹² Geft Outdoor, LLC v. City of Westfield, 39 F.4th 821, 824 (7th Cir. 2022) (applying rule that speech is content-based only if it “target[s] speech based on its communicative content,” or “applies to particular speech because of the topic discussed or the idea or message, and rejecting need to read rule).

⁹³ Outfront Media, LLC v. City of Grand Rapids, 2022 WL 3329484, at *11 (Mich. Ct. App. Aug. 11, 2022) (holding a location-based distinction between off-premises signs and on-premises signs does not amount to a content-based restriction).

⁹⁴ Street Media Group, LLC v. Bd. of Cnty. Comm’rs of County of Adams, 2023 WL 5613018, at *2 (D. Colo. Mar. 30, 2023) (citing City of Austin as upholding distinction between off-premises and on-premises signs, and holding that billboard regulation survived intermediate scrutiny); Spring House Com., LLC v. City of Richmond, Kentucky, 2022 WL 17406310, at *3 (E.D. Ky. Dec. 2, 2022) (rejecting argument that off-premises v. on-premises distinction had impermissible purpose or justification); Cincinnati v. Fourth Nat’l Realty, LLC, 214 N.E.3d 1 at ¶ 20 (Ohio App. March 29, 2023) (upholding prohibition on off-premises signs). See also Florek v. Bedora, 2023 WL 2808313, at *4 (E.D. Wis. Apr. 6, 2023) (City of Austin does not apply to content-based distinctions between different types of signs because it involved simple “on-premises/off-premises distinction); Fairway Outdoor Advert., LLC v. City of High Point, 2022 WL 17975990, at *6 (M.D.N.C. Dec. 28, 2022) (distinction between off-premises and on-premises sign stricter time limit on noncommercial event-based signs than on commercial ones and limited how many temporary signs could express nonholiday messages but not how many could express holiday messages, did not survive strict scrutiny because it was not narrowly tailored to achieve the city’s interests in traffic safety and aesthetics.⁹⁵

The Model Ordinance in Street Graphics and the Law⁹⁶ contains definitions and regulations for signs that meet the requirements of Reagan.

§ 2:44. Should Reagan Be Read Broadly or Narrowly?

A broad reading would consider the downgrade of the function or purpose rule in Reed and the selection of multiple rules for content-based speech as a rejection or revision of Reed. A narrow reading would limit Reagan to its treatment of the off-premises v. on-premises distinction because it concentrated on that distinction, the history and practice that supports it, and the location exception for the off-premises sign definition problem.

The question is how far the location explanation for upholding the off-premises sign definition extends. Regulating location is one of the purposes of every sign ordinance. Take the simple real estate sign. Sign codes usually define these signs as “Signs advertising property for sale.” This is message-based content under Reed. What if a sign ordinance defined these signs as “Signs located on property offered for sale.” This definition should fall within the location exception. What if the definition is changed to allow “Signs advertising and located on property offered for sale.” Is this definition within the location exception?

§ 2:44. The Remand Decision

Justice Sotomayor remanded the City of Austin case to the Fifth Circuit because she decided that the first amendment inquiry was not ended even if the ordinance was content-neutral. She held that there may still be evidence of an impermissible purpose or justification and that a restriction on freedom of speech or expression must be “narrowly tailored to serve a significant well established under Metromedia decision). But see Advantage of Advert., LLC v. City of Opelika, 2023 WL 5022264, at *7 (M.D. Ala. Aug. 7, 2023) (rejecting motion to dismiss, court held that city made no real effort to show that off-site sign and billboard prohibitions survive intermediate scrutiny).

⁹⁵ Camp Hill Borough Republican Ass'n v. Borough of Camp Hill, 101 F.4th 266 (3d Cir. 2024).

⁹⁶ Street Graphics Model Ordinance, in Street Graphics, supra note 3, at 66. The model ordinance does not define Grand Opening signs, as that definition would be content-based. For a case rejecting free speech objections to a sign ordinance based on an earlier version of this model see National Advertising Co. v. City of Bridgeton, 626 F. Supp. 837 (E.D. Mo. 1985).

governmental interest.” This statement is curious because narrow tailoring is one of the requirements for the constitutionality of time, place, and manner regulations. It is not one of the Central Hudson factors that the Supreme Court applied in Metromedia when it upheld the constitutionality of a ban on billboards.

On remand, the Fifth Circuit upheld the off-premises vs. on-premises distinction.⁹⁷ Neither party contested the existence of significant government interests. The court also noted that the Supreme Court has “repeatedly reviewed and never previously questioned” on-premises vs. off-premises distinctions. It also noted that In the context of sign regulations, the Supreme Court has generally accorded municipalities significant leeway.

The Fifth Circuit applied what appeared to be an intermediate scrutiny review to the off-premises vs. on-premises distinction, but did not clarify the rules courts should apply when carrying it out. After discussing the Supreme Court’s City of Austin decision, the Fifth Circuit held that the plaintiffs did not assert an impermissible purpose or justification, so it had to decide only whether the ban on digitizing existing off-premises signs was “narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest.” Quoting an earlier Supreme Court decision, the court held that narrow tailoring means that the government’s interests need not be accomplished through the “least restrictive or least intrusive means,” but that “the requirement of narrow tailoring is satisfied so long as the ... regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation.”

Curiously, the Fifth Circuit then turned to the Metromedia case, which applied the Central Hudson factors when it upheld a ban on billboards, not the narrow tailoring factor that is not one of the Central Hudson factors. It relied on Metromedia’s holding that on-premises advertising permitted by the sign ordinance did not make it underinclusive. The court also held that the sign company’s decision to limit its challenge to a ban on digitizing off-premises signs, not a ban on off-premises signs, was irrelevant. “[I]ntermediate scrutiny does not require perfect tailoring.”⁹⁸

The sign company argued that the court should not allow an exemption for on-premises digital signs because the Austin sign ordinance did not have any limits for the display of these signs, but the court rejected this argument as factually incorrect. It may have implied that an ordinance can exempt on-premises signs only if it regulates these signs effectively.

⁹⁷ Reagan National Advertising of Austin, Inc. v. City of Austin, 64 F.4th 287 (5th Cir. 2023).

⁹⁸ Id. at 294.

§ 2:4[5] Does Content-Based Commercial Speech Require Strict Scrutiny?

Although the Supreme Court indicated that strict scrutiny does not apply to content-based regulations of commercial speech,⁹⁹ it seemed to hold in Sorrell v. IMS Health Inc. that strict scrutiny applies if commercial speech is content-based.¹⁰⁰ The Court held invalid, as a burden on commercial speech, a Vermont law that restricted the sale, disclosure, or use of pharmacy records that revealed prescribing practices by physicians. Vermont intended the law to prevent the sale of prescription data to drug manufacturers who would use the data to market drugs to physicians because these marketing strategies would lead to prescription decisions that unfairly benefited drug companies. The Court held the Vermont statute “disfavor[ed] marketing, i.e., speech with a particular content,” and so was subject to “[h]eightedened judicial scrutiny.”¹⁰¹ Moreover, the law’s burden was more than incidental and “directed at certain content and ... aimed at particular speakers.”¹⁰² The Court did not explain how it would apply strict scrutiny, but held that “the outcome is the same whether a special commercial speech inquiry or a stricter form of judicial scrutiny is applied.”¹⁰³ It then applied the Central Hudson test to hold the law invalid.

Despite its discussion of the heightened scrutiny standard, the courts have held that Sorrell does not modify Central Hudson’s intermediate standard of judicial review.¹⁰⁴ They have not ⁹⁹ Cent. Hudson Gas & Elec. Corp. v. Pub. Serv. Comm’n of New York, 447 U.S. 557, 564 n.6 (1980) (“Two features of commercial speech permit regulation of its content”). See also Bolger v. Youngs Drug Prods. Corp., 463 U.S. 60, 65 (1983) (“By contrast, regulation of commercial speech based on content is less problematic”); North Olmsted Chamber of Commerce v. City of North Olmsted, 86 F. Supp. 2d 755 (N.D. Ohio 2000) (content-based restrictions on commercial speech receive intermediate scrutiny).

¹⁰⁰ 564 U.S. 552 (2011). See Ashutosh Bhagwat, Sorrell v. Ims Health: Details, Detailing, and the Death of Privacy, 36 Vt. L. Rev. 855 (2012); Richard Samp, Sorrell v. Ims Health: Protecting Free Speech or Resurrecting Lochner?, 2011 Cato Sup. Ct. Rev. 129; Tamara R. Piety, “A Necessary Cost of Freedom”? The Incoherence of Sorrell v. Ims, 64 Ala. L. Rev. 1, 2 (2012).

¹⁰¹ Id. at 564.

¹⁰² Id. at 567.

¹⁰³ Id. at 571.

¹⁰⁴ Retail Digital Network, LLC v. Prieto, 861 F.3d 839, 846-848 (9th Cir. 2017) (advertising, citing cases). Accord Greater Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce v. City of Philadelphia, 949 F.3d 116, 140 (3d Cir. 2020) (employment discrimination). See Oleg Shik, The Central Hudson Zombie: For Better or Worse, Intermediate Tier Review Survives Sorrell v. Ims Health, 25 Fordham Intell. Prop. Media & Ent. L.J. 561 (2015).

usually applied it to invalidate sign ordinances that regulate commercial speech,¹⁰⁵ though in some cases they have applied it to invalidate sign ordinances that were content-based or directed toward a particular advertising message.¹⁰⁶

§ 2:4[6]. The “Need to Read” Rule

§ 2:46. Before Reagan

This rule holds that a sign ordinance is content-based if an enforcement officer has to read it to decide whether a sign has content. As an example, assume a sign ordinance authorizes on-premise signs that advertise real estate for sale, lease, or exchange. The question is whether an ordinance is content-based because an enforcement officer has to read a sign to decide whether it has a real estate message. A court of appeals pointed out the absurdity of construing the “officer must read it” test as a bellwether of content. If applied without common sense, the court held, this principle would mean that every sign, except a blank sign, would be content-based.¹⁰⁷ The Supreme Court rejected the need to read rule in the Reagan decision.

The Supreme Court’s record on the need to read rule before Reagan is mixed. It applied the rule in cases that did not consider sign ordinances.¹⁰⁸ These cases considered statutes that

¹⁰⁵ Retail Digital Network, LLC v. Prieto, 861 F.3d 839, 841 (9th Cir. 2017) (statute forbidding leasing of advertising space to manufacturers of alcoholic beverages); Wag More Dogs Liab. Corp. v. Cozart, 680 F.3d 359, 366 n.4 (4th Cir. 2012) (mural; “Sorrell did not signal the slightest retrenchment from its earlier content-neutrality jurisprudence.”); Vugo, Inc. v. City of Chicago, 273 F. Supp. 3d 910, 916 (N.D. Ill. 2017) (ordinance prohibiting commercial advertising on the interior or exterior of a drivers’ vehicles); Contest Promotions, LLC v. City & Cty. of San Francisco, 2017 WL 76896, at *5 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 9, 2017) (regulation of off-premises and on-premises signs); Lamar Cent. Outdoor, LLC v. City of Los Angeles, 199 Cal. Rptr.3d 620, 629 (Cal. App. 2016) (explaining Sorrell and noting it does not apply to billboard regulation). See also Massachusetts Ass’n of Private Career Sch. v. Healey, 159 F. Supp.3d 173 (D. Mass. 2016) (regulations intended to prevent unfair and deceptive practices in recruiting and enrollment of students at for-profit schools; “Sorrell does not stand for the proposition that strict scrutiny applies to all commercial-speech restrictions, especially regulations that have neutral justifications, such as consumer protection.”)

¹⁰⁶ Kersten v. City of Mandan, 389 F. Supp. 3d 640, 646 (D.N.D. 2019) (mural ordinance; content-based); GJJM Enterprises, LLC v. City of Atl. City, 352 F. Supp. 3d 402, 406 (D.N.J. 2018) (state statute banning “bring your own beer and wine” (BYOB) advertising held content-based); Nat’l Ass’n of Tobacco Outlets, Inc. v. City of Worcester, Mass., , 319 (D. Mass. 2012) (ordinance prohibiting outdoor advertising of tobacco products). See McLean v. City of Alexandria, 106 F. Supp. 3d 736, 741 (E.D. Va. 2015) (invalidating ordinance under intermediate scrutiny that prohibited parking vehicle on any city street for purpose of displaying vehicle for sale; strict scrutiny considered by Sorrell not required). See also Marras v. City of Livonia, 575 F. Supp. 2d 807, 817 (E.D. Mich. 2008) (invalidating ordinance prohibiting commercial messages on parked vehicles; ordinance did not advance governmental interests and was not narrowly drawn).

¹⁰⁷ Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 587 F.3d 966, 978 (9th Cir. 2009) (“to the extent that the Sign Regulation required looking generally at what type of message a sign carries to determine where it can be located, this ‘kind of cursory examination’ did not make the regulation content-based”), aff’d, 707 F.3d 1057, 1063 (9th Cir. 2013), rev’d & remanded on other grounds, 576 U.S. 155 (2015).

prohibited certain types of content, such as statements on “controversial issues of public importance,” or that required an official decision based on certain content, such as the type of magazine being regulated. The Court did not explain why it adopted the need to read rule in these cases.

Then, in Hill v. Colorado,¹⁰⁹ the Court upheld a state statute that regulated speech-related conduct within 100 feet of the entrance to any health care facility and rejected the need to read rule. The statute made it unlawful within regulated areas for any person to “knowingly approach” within eight feet of another person, without that person’s consent, “for the purpose of passing a leaflet or handbill to, displaying a sign to, or engaging in oral protest, education, or counseling with such other person.” The statute did not apply to persons who were not leaf letters or sign carriers unless their approach was for the purpose of engaging in oral protest, education, or counseling.

The Court upheld the statute as a content-neutral time, place, and manner regulation.¹¹⁰ It rejected the need to read rule by rejecting an argument that the law was content-based because the content of oral statements by approaching speakers sometimes had to be examined to decide whether the statute covered them. The Court held it was “common in the law to examine the content of a communication to determine the speaker’s purpose,” and that it had “never held, or suggested, that it is improper to look at the content of an oral or written statement in order to determine whether a rule of law applies to a course of conduct.”¹¹¹ It would not be necessary to ¹⁰⁸ McCullen v. Coakley, 573 U.S. 464, 479 (2014) (act would be content-based if enforcement authorities had to examine content of message to determine whether violation has occurred, but act does not require this); Forsyth Cty. v. Nationalist Movement, 505 U.S. 123, 134 (1992) (must examine content of message to assess costs of security for parade participants to determine fee required by ordinance); Arkansas Writers' Project, Inc. v. Ragland, 481 U.S. 221, 230 (1987) (enforcement authorities must read content of message to decide whether magazine should be taxed); F.C.C. v. League of Women Voters of California, 468 U.S. 364, 383 (1984) (statute forbade any noncommercial educational broadcasting station that receives a grant from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting to “engage in editorializing;” “enforcement authorities must necessarily examine the content of the message” to decide if violation has occurred). In some cases, a court relied on the need to read test in addition to deciding that an ordinance is content-based under other criteria. E.g., Neighborhood Enters. v. City of St. Louis, 644 F.3d 728, 736 (8th Cir. 2011) (and holding that “zoning code's definition of ‘sign’ is impermissibly content-based because “the message conveyed determines whether the speech is subject to the restriction”) (2012).

¹⁰⁹ 530 U.S. 703 (2000), noted, 114 Harv. L. Rev. 289 (2000). See also Regan v. Time, Inc., 468 U.S. 641 (1984) (color and size requirements in federal statute regulating currency reproductions did not regulate content because; official did not have to evaluate a message when deciding whether it violated the statute).

¹¹⁰ See § 2:8.

know “exactly what words were spoken” to decide whether they were covered by the statute. “[C]ursory examination” to decide whether speech was casual conversation excluded from the coverage of a regulation of picketing would not be problematic.¹¹²

Lower federal courts varied in their interpretation of the Supreme Court decisions. A substantial number of courts did not apply the need to read requirement¹¹³ or did not apply it when content neutrality is not an issue.¹¹⁴ Several other cases, however, relied on the need to read a sign to decide whether it was content-based,¹¹⁵ or whether there was an exemption from the ordinance

¹¹¹ Hill, 530 U.S. at 721.

¹¹² Id. at 731-732.

¹¹³ Act Now to Stop War & End Racism Coal. & Muslim Am. Soc’y Freedom Found. v. District of Columbia, 846 F.3d 391, 409 (D.C. Cir.) (ordinance requiring event-related signs to be removed from public lampposts; not content-based though officials must look at sign to determine if it is event-related, quoting Hill); Wag More Dogs, LLC v. Cozart, 680 F.3d 359, 368 (4th Cir. 2012) (“That Arlington officials must superficially evaluate a sign’s content to determine the extent of applicable restrictions is not an augur of constitutional doom,” quoting Hill); Covenant Media of S.C., LLC v. City of N. Charleston, 493 F.3d 421, 434 (4th Cir. 2007) (“to the extent that the Sign Regulation required looking generally at what type of message a sign carries to determine where it can be located, this ‘kind of cursory examination’ did not make the regulation content-based,” quoting Hill); G.K. Ltd. Travel v. City of Lake Oswego, 436 F.3d 1064, 1079 (9th Cir. 2006) (“A grandfather provision requiring an officer to read a sign’s message for no other purpose than to determine if the text or logo has changed, making the sign now subject to the City’s regulations, is not content-based.”); LaTour v. City of Fayetteville, 442 F.3d 1094, 1096 (8th Cir. 2004) (“It takes some analysis to determine if a sign is ‘political,’ but one can tell at a glance whether a sign is displaying the time or temperature.”) (2008); Baldwin Park Free Speech Coal. v. City of Baldwin Park, 2020 WL 758786, at *6 (C.D. Cal. Feb. 13, 2020) (quoting Hill); Kennedy v. Avondale Estates, Ga., 414 F. Supp. 2d 1184, 1198 (N.D. Ga. 2005) (sign regulation that requires regulator to read sign to determine if regulation applies is not automatically content-based); Nichols Media Group, LLC v. Town of Babylon, 365 F. Supp. 2d 295, 311 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) (reading to determine neutral information to decide type of sign or whether banned as billboard, or to distinguish real estate and business signs, does not make an ordinance content-based); B & B Coastal Enters. v. Demers, 276 F. Supp. 2d 155, 168 n.16 (D. Me. 2003) (deciding whether a sign is an identification or advertising sign). See also accord American Civil Liberties Union of Illinois v. Alvarez, 679 F.3d 583, 603 (7th Cir. 2012) (eavesdropping statute).

¹¹⁴ Lone Star Sec. & Video, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles, 827 F.3d 1192, 1200 (9th Cir. 2016) (motorized billboard ordinances not content-based; officer must decide only whether vehicle is an excluded “advertising display” with primary purpose to display messages rather than transporting passengers or carrying cargo); G.K. Ltd. Travel v. City of Lake Oswego, 436 F.3d 1064, 1078 (9th Cir.) (refusing to apply test when ordinance not content-based) (2006); Nichols Media Group, LLC v. Town of Babylon, 365 F. Supp. 2d 295, 311 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) (reading of permit application to determine neutral information to decide type of sign or whether banned as billboard, or to distinguish real estate and business signs, does not make an ordinance content-based).

¹¹⁵ Neighborhood Enters. v. City of St. Louis, 644 F.3d 728 (8th Cir. 2011) (must look at content of sign to determine whether particular object qualifies as a “sign” subject to regulation, or is a “non-sign” or exempt from regulation); GEFT Outdoor, L.L.C. v. City of Westfield, 491 F. Supp. 3d 387, 405 (S.D. Ind. 2020) (“The fact that a government official has to read a sign’s message to determine the sign’s purpose is enough, under Reed, to subject the law to strict scrutiny even though the sign’s location also is involved.”); Withers v. Vill. of Airmont, 2010 WL 11712641, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 30, 2010) (political signs; village code content-based because it was necessary to look at content of sign to know which provisions apply, even within the category of temporary signs); Vono v. Lewis, 594 F. Supp. 2d 189 (D.R.I. 2009) (off-premises/on-premises distinction); Outdoor Sys. v. City of Merriam, 67 F. Supp. 2d 1258 (D.

that made the ordinance content-based.¹¹⁶ Other courts held an ordinance content-based when an official had to examine the content of a sign to decide what size and duration requirements applied,¹¹⁷ or whether a sign was on-premises or off-premises to determine whether a fee was due.¹¹⁸

§ 2:46. The Reagan Decision

Justice Sotomayor rejected the “need to read” rule, although she called it a “read-the-sign” rule. She held it was “too extreme” an interpretation of Court precedent, because the definition of an off-premise sign in the Austin sign ordinance required an examination of speech only to draw “neutral, location-based lines” and was agnostic on content. As she explained, “First Amendment precedent and doctrine have consistently recognized that restrictions on speech may require some evaluation of the speech and nonetheless remain content neutral.” Supreme Court precedent supported her decision, she held, because it has rejected the view that “any examination of speech or expression inherently triggers heightened First Amendment concern.” The ordinance only requires “reading a billboard to determine whether it directs readers to the property on which it stands or to some other, offsite location. This statement is not quite accurate, because the Supreme Court had split on whether a need to read rule was required. Justice Sotomayor did not discuss these cases. Rejection of the need to read rule means that courts do not have an automatic trigger they can use to turn a sign ordinance into a content-based regulation.

Kan. 1999) (“city must evaluate the content of the sign to determine whether it is allowed”).

¹¹⁶ Outdoor Media Grp., Inc. v. City of Beaumont, 506 F.3d 895 (9th Cir. 2007) (exemptions in ordinance); Neighborhood Enters. v. City of St. Louis, 644 F.3d 728 (8th Cir. 2011) (definition of sign); Foti v. City of Menlo Park, 146 F.3d 629 (9th Cir. 1998) (exemptions for “open house” real estate signs and safety, traffic, and public informational signs were content-based); Desert Outdoor Advertising v. City of Moreno Valley, 103 F.3d 814 (9th Cir. 1996) (certain off site noncommercial signs); National Advertising Co. v. Orange, 861 F.2d 246 (9th Cir. 1988) (same); Int'l Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Troy, , 2017 WL 2831702 (E.D. Mich. June 30, 2017) (temporary signs and other exemptions); Harp Advert. of Illinois, Inc. v. Vill. of Chicago Ridge, 1992 WL 386481 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 13, 1992) (ordinance content-based because it “requires the Village to consider the content of signs to determine whether or not they are exempted from the provisions of the sign code”).

¹¹⁷ Advantage Media, L.L.C. v. City of Hopkins, 379 F. Supp. 2d 1030 (D. Minn. 2005); Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. Town Bd. of Town of Windham, 352 F. Supp. 2d 297 (N.D.N.Y. 2005); Savago v. Vill. of New Paltz, 214 F. Supp. 2d 252, 257 (N.D.N.Y. 2002).

¹¹⁸ Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. City of St. Paul, 2003 WL 21857830 (D. Minn. 2003).

§ 2:46. After Reagan

The courts have followed City of Austin and have rejected the need to read rule.¹¹⁹

§ 2:5. Definitions

Definitions in a sign ordinance cannot be a prior restraint.¹²⁰ Neither can the definition of a sign create content-based issues.¹²¹ A sign ordinance must not define a sign by defining its content. The definition of “street graphic” in the Model Ordinance in Street Graphics and the Law, which can also be the definition of a “sign,” is content neutral: Any structure that has a visual display visible from a public right-of-way and is designed to identify, announce, direct, or inform.¹²²

A federal district court held a similar definition content-neutral post-Reed: Any object, device, display or structure . . . that is used to advertise, identify, display, direct or attract attention to an object, person, institution, organization, business, product, service, event, or location by any means including words, letters, figures, designs, symbols, fixtures, colors, or illumination whether affixed to a building or separate from any building.¹²³ The court held that “[t]his expansive definition does not on its face refer to the content of speech, either by singling out a viewpoint or a particular topic of speech.”¹²⁴

Signs are regulated in the Model Ordinance by their structural characteristics and location, not by their content. A Ground Sign, for example, is defined as “A street graphic supported by one or more uprights, posts, or bases placed upon or affixed in the ground and not attached to any part ¹¹⁹ Lamar Co., LLC v. Lexington-Fayette Urb. Cnty. Gov't, 677 F.Supp.3d 673, 693 (E.D. Ky. 2023) (following City of Austin and rejecting “need to read” rule).

¹²⁰ Signs for Jesus v. Town of Pembroke, 977 F.3d 93, 108 (1st Cir. 2020) (“including but not limited language” in sign definition held not prior restraint).

¹²¹ For discussion of content issues in sign definitions in the Federal Highway Beautification Act see § 5:1, in the off-premises vs. on-premises distinction, see § 2:44.

¹²² Street Graphics § 1.03, supra note 3, at 75. Commentary in the model ordinance notes that “The definition is content neutral because it does not specify the content that must be included in a street graphic. Any content, whether it was represented by letters or numbers, for example, would qualify as a street graphic.” Id.

¹²³ Peterson v. Vill. of Downers Grove, 150 F. Supp. 3d 910, 919-920 (N.D. Ill. 2015), aff'd sub nom. On other grounds Leibundguth Storage & Van Serv., Inc. v. Vill. of Downers Grove, Illinois, 939 F.3d 859 (7th Cir. 2019).

¹²⁴ Id. (emphasis in original).

of a building.”¹²⁵

§ 2:6. Speaker-Based Neutrality

Speaker-based neutrality is another form of content neutrality. Reed v. Town of Gilbert considered speaker-based neutrality.¹²⁶ There the Court decided whether exemptions included in the town’s sign ordinance were content-based because they were speaker-based. The ordinance defined a sign depending on who was “speaking,” such as an ideological speaker for a sign allowed having ideological content. What the Court decided on this point is not clear. Speaker-based distinctions, the Court said, “are all too often simply a means to control content.”¹²⁷ It added that “we have insisted that ‘laws favoring some speakers over others demand strict scrutiny when the legislature’s speaker preference reflects a content preference.’”¹²⁸ It is not clear from this statement whether speaker-based speech must be content-based before it is subject to strict scrutiny.

This problem can be important in sign regulation. Sign ordinances usually assign different sign types to different land uses. The question is whether the ordinance is speaker-based because the designated land use is a “speaker” for the sign.

Some Supreme Court decisions did not require speaker-based neutrality. The Court in Turner Broadcasting System v. Federal Communications Commission (I),¹²⁹ which is cited in Reed, upheld the “must-carry” provisions of a federal statute. It required cable operators to carry a certain number of broadcast signals according to a statutory formula from “local commercial television stations” and “noncommercial education television stations.” The Court held that “speaker-partial” laws are not presumed invalid, and adopted the limited view that “laws favoring some speakers over others demand strict scrutiny when the legislature’s speaker preference reflects a content preference,”¹³⁰ which is the language quoted in Reed. A court of appeals applied this ¹²⁵ Street Graphics § 1.03, supra note 3, at 72.

¹²⁶ 576 U.S. 155 (2015).

¹²⁷ Id. at 170, quoting Citizens United v. Federal Election Comm’n, 558 U.S. 310 (2010).

¹²⁸ Reed, 576 U.S. at 170, quoting Turner Broad. Sys. v. F.C.C., 512 U.S. 622, 658 (1994).

¹²⁹ 512 U.S. 622 (1994).

¹³⁰ Id. at 658. See also Perry Education Ass’n v. Perry Local Educators’ Ass’n, 460 U.S. 37 (1983) (upholding collective bargaining agreement providing the exclusive bargaining representative, but no other union, would have access to the interschool mail system; speaker-based restrictions “may be impermissible in a public forum,” but are permissible in a nonpublic forum if “they are reasonable in light of the purpose which the forum at issue serves.”).

holding when it upheld a speaker-based sign regulation that exempted some signs from a fee and the permit process.¹³¹

Despite these decisions, some lower courts before Reed struck down sign regulations because they were speaker-based.¹³² One court, for example, held invalid an exemption for signs located on fences or walls surrounding athletic fields and within sports arenas and stadiums, but not signs on fences and walls located elsewhere.¹³³ Language in some Supreme Court cases supports these decisions by indicating that speaker-based limitations on speech are content-based.¹³⁴ Lower court decisions post-Reed on this issue are mixed.¹³⁵

The Supreme Court considered this issue most recently in *Sorrell v. IMS Health, Inc.*¹³⁶ It held invalid a Vermont law providing that information identifying prescribers of medical ¹³¹ G.K. Ltd. Travel v. City of Lake Oswego, 436 F.3d 1064, 1077 (9th Cir. 2006) (“That the law affects plaintiffs more than other speakers does not, in itself, make the law content-based.”).

¹³² Solantic, LLC v. City of Neptune Beach, 410 F.3d 1250, 1266 (11th Cir. 2005) (e.g., noncommercial signs displayed by public utilities). See also Ackerley Communications of Mass., Inc. v. City of Somerville, 878 F.2d 513, 518 (1st Cir. 1989) (striking down a sign ordinance whose “grandfather” clause allowed certain speakers to use nonconforming signs, observing that “even if a complete ban on nonconforming signs would be permissible, we must consider carefully the government’s decision to pick and choose among the speakers permitted to use such signs”).

¹³³ Bonita Media Enterprises, LLC v. Collier Cty. Code Enf’t Bd., no2008 WL 423449 (M.D. Fla. Feb. 13, 2008).

¹³⁴ E.g., First National Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765 (1978) (“In the realm of protected speech, the legislature is constitutionally disqualified from dictating the subjects about which persons may speak and the speakers who may address a public issue.”). But see US West v. United States, 48 F.3d 1092 (9th Cir. 1994) (citing Bellotti and similar cases, and holding that Turner “flatly rejected the contention that all regulations distinguishing among speakers warrant strict scrutiny”), vacated and remanded to decide mootness, 516 U.S. 1155 (1996), dismissed as moot, sub nom., Pacific Telesis Group v. United States, 84 F.3d 1153 (9th Cir. 1996).

¹³⁵ Harel Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. Clark Cnty., 2021 WL 3932252, at *4 (D. Nev. Sept. 2, 2021) (rejecting argument that ordinance was speaker-based because it exempted hotels and recreational facilities from billboard ban); Signs for Jesus v. Town of Pembroke, 230 F. Supp.3d 49 (D.N.H. 2017) (rejecting argument that ordinance was speaker-based because it applied to new speakers but not grandfathered speakers and to nongovernmental speakers but not governmental speakers; state statute required protection of all nonconforming uses, and exemption for land users was based on state law); Timilsina v. West Valley City, 121 F. Supp. 3d 1205, 1216 (D. Utah 2015) (strict scrutiny required only if “speaker preference reflects a content preference,” quoting Turner); California Outdoor Equity Partners, LLC v. City of Los Angeles, 145 F. Supp. 3d 921, 929 (C.D. Cal. 2015) (rejecting allegation that ordinance prefers certain speakers over others, such as operators of on-site signs; Reed not cited), with www.RicardoPacheco.com v. City of Baldwin Park, 2017 WL 2962772 (C.D. Cal. July 10, 2017) (“serious questions” whether speaker preference for businesses, especially businesses hosting special events, reflects a content preference for commercial speech). See Citizens for Free Speech, LLC v. Cty. of Alameda, 194 F. Supp. 3d 968, 981 (N.D. Cal. 2016) (applying Reed analysis of speaker-based speech in finding ordinance with exemptions violated equal protection).

¹³⁶ Sorrell v. IMS Health Inc., 564 U.S. 552 (2011). Reed cited and quoted from but did not explain the holding in Sorrell. E.g., Reed, 576 U.S. at 153. See Tamara R. Piety, “A Necessary Cost of Freedom”? The Incoherence of prescriptions could not be sold by pharmacies or similar entities, disclosed by them for marketing purposes, or used for marketing by pharmaceutical manufacturers unless the prescriber consented. The Court held the law invalid partly because it imposed a burden based on “the identity of the speaker,” and was “aimed at particular speakers,” such as the pharmacies and manufacturers controlled by the law.¹³⁷ It did not explain this conclusion. The dissent argued it was not unusual for “particular rules” to be speaker-based because they affected only a class of entities, such as firms subject to an energy regulation that imposed labeling requirements for home appliances.¹³⁸

§ 2:7. Judicial Standards for Regulating Commercial Speech

§ 2:7[1]. An Overview

This section considers the judicial review standards the Supreme Court adopted to review laws that affect content-neutral commercial speech.¹³⁹ Beginning with its Central Hudson decision in 1980, the court applied an intermediate scrutiny judicial review that is less than strict scrutiny¹⁴⁰ but stronger than the weaker rational basis review courts apply to economic regulation.¹⁴¹ A year later the Court applied Central Hudson to uphold a San Diego sign ordinance that prohibited commercial billboards.¹⁴² These are the two principal Supreme Court decisions on the regulation of commercial speech.¹⁴³ The Reed case left some doubt about the continued validity of these decisions, as the Court in this case did not mention either decision. There was some concern that Reed required all laws, including laws regulating commercial speech to be content neutral, but most sign ordinance cases since Reed have held that the earlier commercial speech cases are not Sorrell v. IMS, 64 Ala. L. Rev. 1 (2012) (decision “makes a hash of the commercial speech doctrine”).

¹³⁷ Sorrell, 564 U.S. 552, 567.

¹³⁸ Sorrell, 564 U.S. 552, 589.

¹³⁹ For a review of commercial speech doctrine see Oleg Shik, The Central Hudson Zombie: For Better or Worse, Intermediate Tier Review Survives Sorrell v. Ims Health, 25 Fordham Intell. Prop. Media & Ent. L.J. 561 (2015).

¹⁴⁰ Central Hudson Gas & Elec. Corp. v. Public Serv. Comm’n, 447 U.S. 557 (1980).

¹⁴¹ Edenfield v. Fane, 507 U.S. 76 (1993) (“Unlike rational basis review, the Central Hudson standard does not permit us to supplant the precise interests put forward by the State with other suppositions.”).

¹⁴² Metromedia, Inc. v. City of San Diego, 453 U.S. 490 (1981).

¹⁴³ Daniel R. Mandelker, Billboards, Signs, Free Speech, and the First Amendment, 55 Real Prop. Tr. & Est. L.J. 367, 382-402 (2020) (discussing Central Hudson and Metromedia).

affected by the Reed decision.¹⁴⁴ Cases post-Reed continue to apply the Central Hudson criteria to sign ordinances regulating commercial speech.¹⁴⁵ There are cases holding contra when the speech is content-based or partly noncommercial.¹⁴⁶

The Supreme Court also adopted time, place, and manner rules for laws that affect free speech, including sign ordinances.¹⁴⁷ These rules have somewhat different requirements than the Central Hudson test, but the Court has held that the requirements are substantially similar.¹⁴⁸ It has not decided when which one applies, or whether they have to be applied together.¹⁴⁹

¹⁴⁴ Harel Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. Clark Cnty., 2021 WL 3932252, at *2 (D. Nev. Sept. 2, 2021); Adams Outdoor Advertising Limited Partnership v. City of Madison, 2020 WL 1689705, at *12 (W.D. Wis. Apr. 7, 2020) (discussing cases); Roland Digital Media, Inc. v. City of Livingston, 2018 WL 6788594, at *9 (M.D. Tenn. Dec. 26, 2018); Contest Promotions, LLC v. City & Cty. of San Francisco, 2015 WL 4571564, at *4 (N.D. Cal. July 28, 2015) (extensively reviewing Supreme Court cases; “Reed does not concern commercial speech, and therefore does not disturb the framework which holds that commercial speech is subject only to intermediate scrutiny as defined by the Central Hudson test.”), aff’d, 704 F. App’x 665 (9th Cir. 2017); RCP Publications Inc. v. City of Chicago, 204 F. Supp. 3d 1012, 1017 (N.D. Ill. 2016) (Reed did not consider this issue); Geft Outdoor LLC v. Consol. City of Indianapolis & Cty. of Marion, 187 F. Supp. 3d 1002, 1016 (S.D. Ind. 2016) (Reed omitted mention of Central Hudson and Metromedia); Citizens for Free Speech, LLC v. Cty. of Alameda, 114 F. Supp. 3d 952, 968 (N.D. Cal. 2015); California Outdoor Equity Partners v. City of Corona, 2015 WL 4163346, at *10 (C.D. Cal. July 9, 2015) (Central Hudson not even cited); Lamar Cent. Outdoor, LLC v. City of Los Angeles, 199 Cal. Rptr. 3d 620, 635 (Cal. App. 2016) (applying Central Hudson but not discussing Reed); City of Corona v. AMG Outdoor Advert., Inc., 197 Cal. Rptr. 3d 563, 573 (2016) (Metromedia remains the law of the land); Expressview Dev., Inc. v. Town of Gates Zoning Bd. of Appeals, 46 N.Y.S.3d 725, 730 (N.Y. App. Div. 2017). Cases that have considered laws other than sign ordinances have been mixed. Lee Mason, Content Neutrality and Commercial Speech Doctrine After Reed V Town of Gilbert, 84 U. Chi. L. Rev. 955, 977-979 (2017).

¹⁴⁵ E.g., Citizens for Free Speech, LLC v. County of Alameda, 114 F. Supp. 3d 952, 969 (N.D. Cal. 2015); Timilsina v. W. Valley City, 121 F. Supp. 3d 1205, 1215 (D. Utah 2015) (“Neither the Central Hudson test nor subsequent cases applying it make any attempt to first distinguish whether the restriction relates to form or content before deciding which test to apply.”); Lamar Cent. Outdoor, LLC v. City of Los Angeles, 199 Cal. Rptr. 3d 620, 635 (Cal. App. 2016).

¹⁴⁶ Int’l Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Troy, 974 F.3d 690, 702-08 (6th Cir. 2020), (applied Reed to hold intermediate-scrutiny standard for commercial speech applies only to speech regulation that is content-neutral on its face; regulation of commercial speech that is not content-neutral is subject to strict scrutiny under Reed). Accord GEFT Outdoor, L.L.C. v. City of Westfield, 491 F. Supp. 3d 387, 404 (S.D. Ind. 2020) (strict scrutiny applies when ordinance affects both commercial and noncommercial speech).

¹⁴⁷ § 2:8.

¹⁴⁸ Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly, 533 U.S. 525, 554 (2001) (tests substantially similar, citing Fox); United States v. Edge Broadcasting Co., 509 U.S. 418, 430 (1993) (“the validity of time, place, or manner restrictions is determined under standards very similar to those applicable in the commercial speech context”); San Francisco Arts & Athletics, Inc. v. United States Olympic Comm., 483 U.S. 522, 537 n.16 (1987) (tests substantially similar); Board of Trustees of the State University of New York v. Fox, 492 U.S. 469, 477 (1989) (same, quoting San Francisco Arts). Accord Hucul Advert., LLC v. Charter Twp. of Gaines, 748 F.3d 273, 276 (6th Cir. 2014).

¹⁴⁹ But see XXL of Ohio, Inc. v. City of Broadview Heights, 341 F. Supp. 2d 765, 783 (N.D. Ohio 2004) (“The test for restrictions on commercial speech in Central Hudson is not applied, however, if an ordinance restricts both commercial and non-commercial signs.”). See also Cleveland Area Board of Realtors v. City of Euclid, 88 F.3d 382,

§ 2:7[2]. The Central Hudson Case

The leading case that established the intermediate scrutiny standard of judicial review for commercial speech is Central Hudson Gas & Elec. Corp. v. Public Service Commission.¹⁵⁰ The Court held invalid a Commission regulation that completely banned promotional advertising by electric utilities, but that allowed informational advertising designed to shift consumption to off-peak periods. It recognized the distinction between commercial and noncommercial speech, accepted the rule that commercial speech requires “lesser protection,” and held that “[t]he protection available for particular commercial expression turns on the nature both of the expression and of the governmental interests served by its regulation.”¹⁵¹

The Court adopted four criteria for the judicial review of laws affecting commercial speech that have dominated judicial review:

At the outset, we must determine whether the expression is protected by the First Amendment. For commercial speech to come within that provision, (1) it at least must concern lawful activity and not be misleading. Next, we ask (2) whether the asserted governmental interest is substantial. If both inquiries yield positive answers, we must determine (3) whether the regulation directly advances the governmental interest asserted, and (4) whether it is not more extensive than is necessary to serve that interest.¹⁵²

Although a law that fails any one of the four criteria violates the free speech clause, the four criteria are not discrete and are interrelated.¹⁵³ The third criterion, when combined with the fourth criterion is an ends/means test that requires an acceptable fit between the regulation and its objective.¹⁵⁴ The Court did not require content neutrality.¹⁵⁵ It reaffirmed the Central Hudson

385–86 (6th Cir.1996) (finding such an ordinance content neutral but not narrowly tailored under the time, place, and manner test and finding that alternative tests of constitutionality were inadequate).

¹⁵⁰ 447 U.S. 557 (1980).

¹⁵¹ Id. at 563.

¹⁵² Id. at 566. Numbers are inserted to identify the four criteria. See Nat'l Experiential, LLC v. City of Chicago, 2024 WL 3757066, at *13 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 9, 2024) (reaffirming rule that court can consider Central Hudson at motion to dismiss stage and that aesthetic interests are substantial interests but reserving decision for factual development).

¹⁵³ Greater New Orleans Broadcasting Ass'n v. United States, 527 U.S. 173, 184 (1999).

¹⁵⁴ Posadas de Puerto Rico Assocs. v. Tourism Co. of Puerto Rico, 478 U.S. 328, 341 (1986) (“The last two steps of the Central Hudson analysis basically involve a consideration of the ‘fit’ between the legislature’s ends and the means chosen to accomplish those ends.”). See also Board of Trustees of the State University of New York v. Fox, 492 U.S. 469 (1989) (requiring a reasonable fit).

¹⁵⁵ Central Hudson, 447 U.S. at 564 n.6.

criteria in a recent decision¹⁵⁶ though several Justices urged rejection, and several commentators have recommended rejection and reform.¹⁵⁷

The Court in Central Hudson applied these criteria ad hoc to the Commission's regulation. It found the utility's advertising was protected speech, and held that the regulation served substantial governmental interests because it would promote energy conservation and prevent rate inequities that promotional advertising might create. The regulation partly satisfied the third "directly advance" criterion because the advertising ban directly advanced the state's interest in energy conservation. It partly failed the third criterion because the link between promotional advertising and rate inequity was "highly speculative." The advertising ban failed the "critical" fourth criterion because it banned all promotional advertising, even advertising that promoted energy-efficient products or that did not affect energy use. A more limited regulation of commercial speech could promote the state's interest in energy conservation. As an alternative, the Court suggested the Commission could restrict the format and content of utility advertising by requiring, for example, that advertising include information about the energy efficiency and expense of an advertised utility service.

§ 2:7[3]. The Metromedia Case

One year after Central Hudson the Supreme Court in *Metromedia v. City of San Diego*¹⁵⁸ applied the Central Hudson criteria to uphold a San Diego sign ordinance that completely banned commercial billboards.¹⁵⁹ A badly split Court produced a plurality opinion by Justice White, signed by three other Justices, that most federal courts follow in free speech cases that consider sign ¹⁵⁶ Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly, 533 U.S. 525, 544, 555 (2001).

¹⁵⁷ E.g., Charles Fischette, A New Architecture of Commercial Speech Law, 31 Harv. J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 663 (2008); Alan Howard, Replacing the Commercial Speech Doctrine with a Tort-Based Relational Framework, 41 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 1093 (1991); Note, Shannon M. Hinegardner, Abrogating the Supreme Court's De Facto Rational Basis Standard for Commercial Speech: A Survey and Proposed Revision of the Third Central Hudson Prong, 43 New Eng. L. Rev. 523 (2009); Brian J. Waters, Comment, A Doctrine in Disarray: Why the First Amendment Demands the Abandonment of the Central Hudson Test for Commercial Speech, 27 Seton Hall L. Rev. 1626 (1997).

¹⁵⁸ Metromedia, Inc. v. City of San Diego, 453 U.S. 490 (1981), noted, 95 Harv. L. Rev. 211 (1981). Justices Stewart, Marshall, and Powell joined Justice White. Justice Brennan concurred in the judgment of the plurality opinion, joined by Justice Blackmun. Justice Stevens concurred in parts I-IV of the plurality opinion and dissented from parts V-VII and the judgment. Chief Justice Burger and Justice Rehnquist filed dissenting opinions. None of these Justices are presently on the Court.

¹⁵⁹ Daniel R. Mandelker, Billboards, Signs, Free Speech, and the First Amendment, 55 Real Prop. Tr. & Est. L.J. 367, 389-393 (2020) (discussing Metromedia).

ordinances.¹⁶⁰ The Supreme Court has now held that most of the Metromedia plurality opinion should be treated as a majority opinion.¹⁶¹ The Third Circuit is an exception and rejected the Metromedia plurality for a different judicial review standard.¹⁶²

The San Diego ordinance prohibited signs on a building or other property that displayed goods or services produced or offered elsewhere but allowed signs advertising goods or services available on the premises.¹⁶³ This provision effectively prohibited off-premises billboards. Noncommercial advertising, unless within specified exemptions, was prohibited everywhere, and the ordinance contained several exemptions for commercial and noncommercial signs.

Metromedia was decided on cross-motions for summary judgment,¹⁶⁴ which the trial court granted.¹⁶⁵ This procedure meant there was no trial and no decision on the facts. The California Supreme Court interpreted the ordinance as a prohibition only of commercial billboards, which ¹⁶⁰ Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. City of New York, 594 F.3d 94, 106 (2d Cir.) (applying Metromedia); RTM Media, L.L.C. v. City Of Houston, 584 F.3d 220, 223 (5th Cir. 2009) (Metromedia controls); Prime Media, Inc. v. City of Brentwood, Tenn., 398 F.3d 814, 820 (6th Cir. 2005) (applying Metromedia); Café Erotica of Fla., Inc. v. St. Johns Cty., 360 F.3d 1274, 1285 (11th Cir. 2004) (same); Lavey v. City of Two Rivers, 171 F.3d 1110, 1114 (7th Cir. 1999) (favorably discussing Metromedia); Ackerley Communs. of the Northwest v. Krochalis, 108 F.3d 1095, 1099 (9th Cir. 1997) (rejecting claim that later cases undermined Metromedia); Outdoor Graphics v. City of Burlington, 103 F.3d 690, 695 (8th Cir. 1996) (favorably citing Metromedia); Nat'l Advert. Co. v. City & Cty. of Denver, 912 F.2d 405, 409 (10th Cir. 1990) (applying Metromedia); Ackerley Commc'ns of Massachusetts, Inc. v. City of Somerville, 878 F.2d 513, 516 (1st Cir. 1989) (applying Metromedia); Naegele Outdoor Advert., Inc. v. City of Durham, 844 F.2d 172, 173 (4th Cir. 1988) (same). But see Scadron v. City of Des Plaines, 734 F. Supp. 1437, 1445 (N.D. Ill. 1990) (relying on dissenting and concurring opinions in Metromedia to reject plurality holding on noncommercial speech), aff'd on the analysis of the district court, 1993 WL 64838, 989 F.2d 502 (7th Cir. 1993) (Table); City of Lakewood v. Colfax Unlimited Ass'n, Inc., 634 P.2d 52, 69 (Colo. 1981) (relying on Brennan opinion to invalidate exemptions).

¹⁶¹ City of Austin, Texas v. Reagan Nat'l Advert. of Austin, LLC, 596 U.S. 61, 73 n.5 (2022) (“Although the opinion in Metromedia was labeled a plurality for four Justices, the relevant portion of the opinion was also joined by a fifth.”). (emphasis in original).

¹⁶² Rappa v. New Castle County, 18 F.3d 1043, 1065 (3d Cir. 1994) (“when there is a significant relationship between the content of particular speech and a specific location or its use, the state can exempt from a general ban speech having that content so long as the state did not make the distinction in an attempt to censor certain viewpoints or to control what issues are appropriate for public debate and so long as the exception also survives the test proposed by the Metromedia concurrence: i.e. the state must show that the exception is substantially related to advancing an important state interest that is at least as important as the interests advanced by the underlying regulation, that the exception is no broader than necessary to advance the special goal, and that the exception is narrowly drawn so as to impinge as little as possible on the overall goal.”). But see Interstate Outdoor Advert., L.P. v. Zoning Bd. of Twp. of Mount Laurel, 706 F.3d 527 (3d Cir. 2013) (relying on Central Hudson and not citing Rappa).

¹⁶³ Metromedia, 453 U.S. at 503. See also id. at 493 n.2.

¹⁶⁴ Metromedia, 453 U.S. at 497. The decision was based on the precise issues presented and necessarily decided. See id. at 499

¹⁶⁵ Metromedia, Inc. v. City of San Diego, 610 P.2d 407, 409 (Cal. 1980)

limited the decision.¹⁶⁶

Justice White swept away any problems that might have been presented by the Central Hudson criteria and approved the billboard ban as a matter of law.¹⁶⁷ Because two of the dissenters would have approved the entire ordinance, they are usually counted as approving the commercial billboard ban. This makes a majority of seven. Justice White struck down the on-premises sign limitation to commercial advertising and the exemptions allowed in the ordinance because of their different treatment of noncommercial speech.

Justice White's view of the case is clear in his opening explanation that “[e]ach method of communicating ideas is ‘a law unto itself,’ and that the law must reflect the ‘differing natures, values, abuses, and dangers’ of each method.”¹⁶⁸ He found “little controversy” over the first, second, and fourth Central Hudson tests. Commercial advertising was neither unlawful nor misleading, and it was “far too late” to contend that traffic safety and aesthetics were not substantial goals,¹⁶⁹ and a majority of the Justices in Metromedia accepted this explanation.¹⁷⁰

The billboard ban did not violate the fourth Central Hudson criterion because it was no broader than necessary. “If the city has a sufficient basis for believing that billboards are traffic hazards and are unattractive, then obviously the most direct and perhaps the only effective

¹⁶⁶ This term was not defined in the ordinance, and the court adopted a “narrow construction” to avoid extending the ordinance to noncommercial signs, which could create a problem of unconstitutional overbreadth. Id. at 410 n.2.

¹⁶⁷ For examples of cases where the lower courts applied the Central Hudson criteria to uphold sign ordinances see RCP Publications Inc. v. City of Chicago, 304 F. Supp.3d 729, 734 (N.D. Ill. 2018) (upholding ordinance prohibiting posting of signs with commercial messages on public property does not require heightened scrutiny under Central Hudson and directly advances city's interests in combatting litter, controlling visual clutter, preventing damage to city property, and promoting traffic safety); Paramount Media Group, Inc. v. Village of Bellwood, 2017 WL 590281 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 14, 2017) (upholding ordinance that prohibited billboards except when located on village property; prohibition as properly based on aesthetic concerns; limited exception for village did not undermine ban; no objection to narrow tailoring; ordinance permitted a variety of on-site commercial signs, and a reasonable fit existed between the objective of preserving the visual environment, compatibility with adjacent land uses and the means used to accomplish these objectives). Compare Vugo, Inc. v. City of New York, 309 F. Supp.3d 139 (S.D.N.Y. 2018), (ordinance prohibiting advertisements in certain vehicles for hires held not narrowly drawn; ordinance could have regulated advertisements through placement, size, or some other manner in which they were presented); Construction & General Laborers' Local Union No. 330 v. Town of Grand Chute, 843 F.3d 745 (7th Cir. 2016) (ordinance prohibited rat and cat inflatable protest signs; case held moot; dissent by Judge Posner rejected aesthetic and safety justifications).

¹⁶⁸ Id. at 500.

¹⁶⁹ Id. at 508–09.

¹⁷⁰ Justice Stevens accepted this justification. Id. at 552. Chief Justice Burger accepted this and the traffic safety justification. Id. at 559–60. Justice Rehnquist believed the “aesthetic justification alone” was sufficient. Id. at 570.

approach to solving the problems they create is to prohibit them.”¹⁷¹ The city did not prohibit all billboards, allowed onsite advertising, and exempted some signs.¹⁷²

Whether the ordinance met the third Central Hudson test was the “more serious” question, but the plurality held the billboard ban substantially advanced the governmental interests it served. Though the record on the relationship between traffic safety and the prohibition of billboards was meager, the California Supreme Court had not set aside the legislative judgment that billboards are traffic safety hazards. Agreeing with the California court, the plurality held that “[w]e likewise hesitate to disagree with the accumulated, commonsense judgments of local lawmakers and of the many reviewing courts that billboards are real and substantial hazards to traffic safety,” citing several cases.¹⁷³ “It is not speculative to recognize that billboards by their very nature, wherever located and however constructed, can be perceived as an ‘esthetic harm.’”¹⁷⁴

Justice White rejected an argument that the ordinance was underinclusive because permitted on-premises while prohibiting off-premises advertising. Allowing on-premises while prohibiting off-premises advertising did not detract from the traffic safety and aesthetic purposes of the ordinance.¹⁷⁵ There were three reasons. Prohibiting off-premises advertising related to the traffic safety and aesthetic objectives of the ordinance. The city may also have believed that off-premises advertising, with its “periodically changing content,” presented more of a problem. Finally, the city could decide there was a stronger public interest in advertising places of business and the products and services available there than in advertising “commercial enterprises available elsewhere.” The footnote collects cases following Metromedia on the under-inclusiveness issue.¹⁷⁶

¹⁷¹ Id. at 508.

¹⁷² See Adams Outdoor Advert. Ltd. P'ship v. Town of Mount Pleasant, 2023 WL 4491197, at *13 (D.S.C. July 12, 2023) (digital sign restriction narrowly tailored to promote town's interests in traffic safety and aesthetics; “reasonable for the Town to contend that its goals are only served by a blanket prohibition rather than selective enforcement”).

¹⁷³ Id. at 509.

¹⁷⁴ Id. at 510

¹⁷⁵ The Court noted that all of the cases considering this issue had upheld this distinction. Id. at 511 n. 17.

¹⁷⁶ Summarizing Supreme Court cases, the Ninth Circuit concluded that a regulation is underinclusive if the exception “ensures that the [regulation] will fail to achieve [its] end,” it does not “materially advance its aim.” In addition, “exceptions that make distinctions among different kinds of speech must relate to the interest the government seeks to advance.” Metro Lights, L.L.C. v. City of Los Angeles, 551 F.3d 898, 906 (9th Cir. 2009) (ordinance prohibiting off-site but allowing on-site signs with an exception for shelters at transit stops among other exceptions held constitutional). See also Contest Promotions, LLC v. City & Cty. of San Francisco, 874 F.3d 597, 603 (9th Cir. 2017) (upholding exemption of on-premises and noncommercial signs; commercial signs presented the important regulatory

§ 2:7[4]. Taxpayers for Vincent

A few years after Metromedia, in Members of City Council v. Taxpayers for Vincent,¹⁷⁷ a majority of the Court upheld a Los Angeles ordinance that prohibited the posting of signs on public property. A weekly sign report required the removal of 1207 signs from public property, including forty-eight campaign signs posted for Vincent on utility poles. The opinion by Justice Stevens was not clear about which Supreme Court rules for free speech he applied. He referenced rules for the review of viewpoint-neutral speech adopted by the Court in *United States v. O'Brien*¹⁷⁸ that are similar to the Central Hudson rules. He also applied the Central Hudson narrow tailoring rule and a rule adopted for time, place, and manner laws that requires adequate alternate modes of communication.¹⁷⁹

Justice Stevens reaffirmed the holding of a majority of the Justices in Metromedia that the city's aesthetic interest supported a billboard prohibition. The visual assault presented by an accumulation of signs posted on public property was a significant substantive evil within the city that it could prohibit.¹⁸⁰ The ordinance was narrowly tailored, as “[t]he incidental restriction on expression which results from the City’s attempt to accomplish such a purpose is considered justified as a reasonable regulation of the time, place, or manner of expression if it is narrowly tailored to serve that interest.” Prohibiting the signs did no more than was necessary to eliminate the exact source of the evil it sought to remedy.¹⁸¹

Alternate channels of communication were available as required by the time, place, and manner rules. Individuals could speak and distribute literature at the same place where the problem); RCP Publications Inc. v. City of Chicago, 304 F. Supp.3d 729, 739 (N.D. Ill. 2018) (upholding ban on posting signs on public property though signs controlled by private entity under contract and noncommercial and non-profit signs were exempt); Paramount Media Grp., Inc. v. Vill. of Bellwood, 2017 WL 590281 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 14, 2017), aff'd on other grounds, 929 F.3d 914 (7th Cir. 2019) (upholding ordinance that prohibited billboards except when located on village property; limited exception for the village did not undermine the ban). See also ArchitectureArt, LLC v. City of San Diego, 231 F. Supp.3d 828, 839 (S.D. Cal. 2017) (requirement that all signs must get a permit, and that only signs with on-premises or public interest messages were allowed, held to advance city's aesthetic interests).

¹⁷⁷ 466 U.S. 789 (1984).

¹⁷⁸ 391 U.S. 367 (1968). The Court first adopted the O'Brien rules for the regulation of symbolic speech. They have not been referenced prominently in any other free speech case that considered a sign ordinance.

¹⁷⁹ § 2:7. The Court rejected an argument that the signs deserved special treatment because the sign posts where the signs were posted were a public forum. Id. at 813-814.

¹⁸⁰ Vincent, 391 U.S. at 807.

¹⁸¹ Id. at 808.

ordinance prohibited the posting of signs. Any advantage obtained by the posting of political signs was available by other means. “[N]othing in the findings indicates that the posting of political posters on public property is a uniquely valuable or important mode of communication,”¹⁸² or that the ability to communicate effectively was threatened by ever-increasing restrictions on expression.¹⁸³ Justice Steven’s reliance on multiple rules is confusing, but the case is an important endorsement of aesthetics and prohibitions on signs as acceptable governmental objectives.

§ 2:7[5]. Central Hudson’s “Directly Advance” Criterion

Metromedia took a hands-off approach to Central Hudson’s third “directly advance” criterion. The plurality adopted a “common sense” rule that did not require studies or reports to justify the commercial billboard ban and held it was not “speculative” to recognize that billboards were aesthetic harms justified their prohibition everywhere. In Edenfield v. Fane,¹⁸⁴ the Supreme Court took a different view. The Court described the third criterion as the “penultimate prong,” held the complaining party has the burden to justify a restriction on commercial speech, and held that mere speculation or conjecture does not satisfy this burden. Instead, the Court held, “a governmental body seeking to sustain a restriction on commercial speech must demonstrate that the harms it recites are real and that its restriction will in fact alleviate them to a material degree.”¹⁸⁵ The Court struck down a state board’s ban on the solicitation of business clients by certified public accountants, noting it did not prove with studies that solicitation would lead to fraud, overreaching, or compromised independence. A report of a national accountant’s organization and the literature disputed the board’s concerns. Other Supreme Court cases have applied the Edenfield rule that speculation and conjecture do not satisfy the “directly advance” test, sometimes upholding and sometimes striking down regulations affecting commercial speech.¹⁸⁶

¹⁸² Id. at 811. The Court added that ever-increasing restrictions on expression did not threaten plaintiffs’ ability to communicate effectively.

¹⁸³ Id. at 812. The Court rejected an argument that a prohibition on unattractive signs could not be justified unless it applied to all unattractive signs everywhere. The validity of the aesthetic interest in eliminating signs in public property was not compromised by a failure to extend it to private property. This disparate treatment was justified by the private citizen’s interest in controlling the use of his property, a less than total ban allowed the display of temporary signs, and a content-neutral ban would enhance the city’s appearance even if some visual blight remained. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. at 811.

¹⁸⁴ 507 U.S. 761 (1993)..

¹⁸⁵ Edenfield, 507 U.S. at 770-771.

¹⁸⁶ Greater New Orleans Broad. Ass’n v. United States, 527 U.S. 173, 187 (1999) (striking down federal legislation

The Supreme Court applied the Edenfield speculation and conjecture test to a regulation by the Massachusetts attorney general that prohibited smokeless tobacco and cigar advertising within 1000 feet of a radius of a school or playground,¹⁸⁷ but held the regulation met the “directly advance” requirement. The Court extensively discussed the Federal Drug Administration and other studies supporting the state’s argument, that advertising plays a significant and important contributing role in a young person’s decision to use tobacco products. Earlier in the decision the Court emphasized it did not require empirical data to justify free speech restrictions. Studies and anecdotes could be enough.¹⁸⁸ The Court then held that the prohibition failed the fourth Central Hudson test.¹⁸⁹

In later cases, the Court backed away from earlier decisions that applied axiomatic assumptions to find that laws directly advanced a governmental interest. The Court struck down laws that prohibited or regulated advertising for “vice” products and activities, such as beer and casino gambling. The implication is that this kind of advertising does not deserve less protection under the free speech clause. In one of these cases, a badly divided Court struck down a state law that prohibited price advertising for liquor products. The lack of a majority for this decision weakens it as a precedent.

prohibiting advertising for gambling; statute and exemptions pierced with exceptions and inconsistencies); 44 Liquormart v. State of Rhode Island, 517 U.S. 484 (1996) (striking down statute that prohibited advertising of liquor prices; plurality decision), noted, 110 Harv. L. Rev. 216 (1996); Florida Bar v. Went for It, 515 U.S. 618, 628, 629 (1995) (upholding ban on direct-mail solicitation in the immediate aftermath of accidents by attorneys as supported by bar studies), noted, 109 Harv. L. Rev. 191 (1995); Rubin v. Coors Brewing Co., 514 U.S. 476, 487 (1995) (striking down federal statute prohibiting advertising of alcohol content on beer labels; no “credible evidence” to support statute); Ibanez v. Florida Dep’t of Bus. & Prof’l Regulation, 512 U.S. 136, 143 (1994) (striking order prohibiting use of certified public account designation as misleading). See also Thompson v. Western States Medical Ctr., 535 U.S. 357 (2002) (Edenfield not cited, but striking down federal statute prohibiting advertising of compounded drugs); United States v. Edge Broadcasting Co., 509 U.S. 418 (U.S. 1993) (same, and upholding federal statute prohibiting broadcast of lottery advertisements); Posadas de Puerto Rico Assocs. v. Tourism Co., 478 U.S. 328 (1986) (upholding Puerto Rico statute and regulations restricting casino advertising pre-Edenfield, relying on legislative belief that advertising would increase demand for gambling).

¹⁸⁷ Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly, 533 U.S. 525 (2001).

¹⁸⁸ Id. at 555, quoting Florida Bar v. Went for It, 515 U.S. 618, 628 (1995).

¹⁸⁹ The Court also held that a restriction on point-of-sale advertising of smokeless tobacco and cigars failed the third Central Hudson criterion. Id. at 566.

§ 2:7[6]. Are Studies or Reports Necessary to Prove That a Sign Ordinance Directly Advances Governmental Interests?

The third Central Hudson criterion states that a law regulating commercial speech, such as a sign ordinance, should directly advance its governmental objectives. An important question is whether studies or reports are necessary to comply with this criterion. A litigant faces difficult and burdensome evidence and burden of proof problems if courts require evidence of studies or reports. There is disagreement in the cases on this issue. Metromedia's plurality adopted a "common sense" approach to this issue and did not require studies or reports to show compliance with this criterion. The Supreme Court confirmed this rule in a later sign case.¹⁹⁰

A later Supreme Court case, Edenfield v. Fane,¹⁹¹ modified this rule in a case that held invalid a state regulation that prohibited direct solicitation by certified public accountants to obtain new clients. The Court held the third criterion could not be satisfied by reliance on "speculation and conjecture."¹⁹² A court can uphold a restriction on commercial speech only if it is demonstrated "that the harms it recites are real and that its restriction will in fact alleviate them to a material degree."¹⁹³ The state had not submitted studies to support the regulation, nor was it supported by a report or by the literature.¹⁹⁴ Other explanations of the third criterion adopted by the Supreme Court vary but are similar.¹⁹⁵

¹⁹⁰ We do not, however, require that "empirical data come ... accompanied by a surfeit of background information [W]e have permitted litigants to justify speech restrictions by reference to studies and anecdotes pertaining to different locales altogether, or even, in a case applying strict scrutiny, to justify restrictions based solely on history, consensus, and 'simple common sense.'" Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly, 533 U.S. 525, 555 (2001) (sign regulation), citing Florida Bar v. Went For It, Inc., 515 U.S. 618, 628 (1995).

¹⁹¹ 507 U.S. 761 (1993), see § 2:6[5]. The Court struck down a ban on solicitation by accountants, because there were no studies proving that solicitation would lead to fraud, overreaching or compromised independence.

¹⁹² Id. at 770-771.

¹⁹³ Id. at 771. The party seeking to uphold the restriction has the burden of proof. Id. at 770..

¹⁹⁴ Id. at 771-774.

¹⁹⁵ Liquormart, Inc. v. Rhode Island, 517 U.S. 484, 489 (1996) (plurality; ban on liquor price advertising held invalid, must "significantly reduce" alcoholic consumption); Ibanez v. Florida Dep't of Bus. & Prof'l Regulation, Bd. of Accountancy, 512 U.S. 136, 143 (1994) (misleading advertising, burden "not slight," Edenfield cited). But see Metromedia, 453 U.S. at 509 (plurality, upholding billboard ban, hesitating to "disagree with the accumulated, common-sense judgments of local lawmakers").

Most courts follow Metromedia and hold in billboard cases that “common-sense” legislative judgment about billboard problems is enough to satisfy the third criterion.¹⁹⁶ Courts have adopted the same view when reviewing ordinances that regulate on-premises signs. The Fourth Circuit, for example, rejected as an “unprecedented contention” an argument that evidence was needed to justify on-premises sign restrictions.¹⁹⁷

*Ackerley Communications of the Northwest v. Krochalis*¹⁹⁸ illustrates these cases. The Ninth Circuit upheld a Seattle ordinance that enacted restrictions on billboards that included a ¹⁹⁶ Interstate Outdoor Advert., L.P. v. Zoning Bd. of Twp. of Mount Laurel, 706 F.3d 527, 530 (3d Cir. 2013) (“Moreover, given the language of Metromedia, we are not willing to conclude that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the ordinance sufficiently advances the substantial interest of traffic safety.”); Outdoor Advert., Inc. v. Cobb Cty., 193 F. App’x 900, 904–05 (11th Cir. 2006); Prime Media, Inc. v. City of Brentwood, 398 F.3d 814, 823 (6th Cir. 2005) (“billboard regulations, whatever other strengths and weaknesses they may have, advance a police power interest in curbing community blight and in promoting traffic safety”); Lamar Co., LLC v. Lexington-Fayette Urb. Cnty. Gov’t, 677 F.Supp.3d 673, 693 (E.D. Ky. 2023) (denial of application to digitize billboards; government not required to submit empirical evidence in support of its alleged interests, did not need to “try to prove that [its] aesthetic [or safety] judgments are right.”); Citizens for Free Speech, LLC v. Cty. of Alameda, 114 F. Supp. 3d 952, 969 (N.D. Cal. 2015); Citizens for Free Speech, LLC v. Cty. of Alameda, 114 F. Supp. 3d 952, 969 (N.D. Cal. 2015); Sharona Properties, L.L.C. v. Orange Vill., 92 F. Supp. 3d 672, 683 (N.D. Ohio 2015); Adirondack Advert., LLC v. City of Plattsburgh, 2013 WL 5463681, at *4 (N.D.N.Y. Sept. 30, 2013) (digital billboards); Lamar Advert. of Penn, LLC v. Town of Orchard Park, 2008 WL 781865, at *24 (W.D.N.Y. Feb. 25, 2008); Bill Salter Advert., Inc. v. City of Brewton, 486 F. Supp. 2d 1314 (S.D. Ala. 2007) (“no serious question”); Action Outdoor Advert. JV, L.L.C. v. Town of Shalimar, 377 F. Supp. 2d 1178, 1181 (N.D. Fla. 2005); Nichols Media Grp., LLC v. Town of Babylon, 365 F. Supp. 2d 295, 309 (E.D.N.Y. 2005); Outdoor Systems, Inc. v. City of Lenexa, 67 F. Supp.2d 1231, 1238-1239 (D. Kan. 1999) (billboards; following Metromedia and accepting legislative findings that ordinance promoted governmental interests in traffic safety and aesthetics; expert opinions or other evidence not needed where common sense will logically suffice); Harp Advert. of Illinois, Inc. v. Vill. of Chicago Ridge, 1992 WL 386481, at *10 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 13, 1992); Suburban Lodges of Am., Inc. v. Columbus Graphics Comm., 761 N.E.2d 1060, 1066 (Ohio App. 2000) (denial of request for a variance from zoning ordinances that limited text on on-premises, freeway-oriented signs to business’ name, address, and product or service).

See also Riel v. City of Bradford, 485 F.3d 736, 753 (3d Cir. 2007) (upholding prohibition of commercial signs in historic district and that they “tend to be erected for longer periods of time and tend to be larger and more elaborate in design”); Long Island Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Inc. Vill. of Massapequa Park, 277 F.3d 622, 627 (2d Cir. 2002) (residential signs); Scadron v. City of Des Plaines, 734 F. Supp. 1437, 1447 (N.D. Ill. 1990), aff’d, 989 F.2d 502 (7th Cir. 1993) (“This decision is directly related to safety and aesthetic goals; it is eminently reasonable for the City to determine that small signs do not pose the same traffic safety risks or aesthetic concerns as do large billboards.”).

¹⁹⁷ Wag More Dogs, LLC v. Cozart, 680 F.3d 359, 365 n.3 (4th Cir. 2012) (wall sign; no cases cited).

¹⁹⁸ 108 F.3d 1095, 1098 (9th Cir. 1997). Other courts relied on statements of purpose in a sign ordinance to hold that evidence was not needed to support the governmental interest in signs. Get Outdoors II, LLC v. City of San Diego, 506 F.3d 886 (9th Cir. 2007) (billboards; statement of purpose of sign code was “to optimize communication and quality of signs while protecting the public and the aesthetic character of the City;” that is all our review requires to prove a significant interest); Outdoor Systems, Inc. v. City of Lenexa, 67 F. Supp.2d 1231, 1238-1239 (D. Kan. 1999) (billboards; following Metromedia and accepting legislative findings that ordinance promoted governmental interests in traffic safety and aesthetics; expert opinions or other evidence not needed where common sense will logically suffice).

statement of purpose expressing its interest in aesthetics and traffic safety. Both parties offered evidence on whether the ordinance met its announced goal, that billboards must be regulated because they can be traffic hazards, contribute to visual blight, and reduce property values. The district court held a trial was unnecessary on whether the ordinance met the Central Hudson criteria, and granted summary judgment to the city. The plaintiff disagreed and argued Metromedia was distinguishable because it came up on stipulated facts, and because later cases placed a greater evidentiary burden on municipalities to justify a restriction on commercial speech.

The court of appeals affirmed the district court, held the Metromedia plurality was still good law, and that a Supreme Court majority confirmed in the Vincent case¹⁹⁹ that an interest in avoiding visual clutter justified a prohibition on billboards. “As a matter of law Seattle's ordinance, enacted to further the city's interest in esthetics and safety, was a constitutional restriction on commercial speech without detailed proof that the billboard regulation will in fact advance the city's interests.”²⁰⁰

A few cases follow Edenfield and reject a billboard ban when studies were not provided.²⁰¹ What studies are required is not clear. In one sign case, the Supreme Court relied on studies and anecdotes and did not require empirical evidence,²⁰² and it has held that municipalities can rely on a variety of studies and “simple common sense.”²⁰³ Lower courts have relied on studies, reports, transcripts, depositions, or testimony.²⁰⁴

¹⁹⁹ Members of City Council v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 808 (1984) (confirming Metromedia by recognizing aesthetic interest of city in prohibiting “the visual assault on the citizens of Los Angeles presented by an accumulation of signs posted on public property.”)

²⁰⁰ Krochalis, 108 F.3d at 1099.

²⁰¹ Interstate Outdoor Adver. v. Zoning Bd. of Township of Cherry Hill, 672 F. Supp. 2d 675, 678-679 (D.N.J. 2009) (“Metromedia deference is warranted only when the municipality provides the court with a rationalization supported by relevant evidence.”); L.D. Mgmt. Co. v. Thomas, 2020 WL 1978387, at *3 (W.D. Ky. Apr. 24, 2020) (no evidence on aesthetic interference or traffic safety); Bell v. Township of Stafford, 541 A.2d 692 (1988) (billboard ban; record almost completely devoid of any evidence concerning what interests are served by ordinance and extent to which ordinance has advanced those interests).

²⁰² Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly, 533 U.S. 525 (2001) (applying Edenfield, Court held studies supported restriction on smokeless tobacco and cigar advertising within 1000 feet of school or playground; studies and anecdotes could be enough, empirical data not required).

²⁰³ Fla. Bar v. Went For It, Inc., 515 U.S. 618, 628 (1995) (upholding Florida Bar rules that prohibited lawyers from using direct mail to solicit personal injury or wrongful death clients within 30 days of accident; “surfeit of information” not required, can rely on studies from different locales, history, consensus and “simple common sense”).

²⁰⁴ Adams Outdoor Advert. Ltd. P'ship v. City of Madison, 2020 WL 1689705, at *15 (W.D. Wis. Apr. 7, 2020)

Although Edenfield did not consider whether studies are necessary to show compliance with the second Central Hudson criterion that requires a legitimate governmental objective, some courts hold they cannot assume compliance unless positive evidence was supplied by the local government.²⁰⁵ They did not take judicial notice of the compliance issue and rejected after-the-fact or extrinsic justifications, such as statements in other ordinances or statutes.²⁰⁶ It is not clear what kind of studies are required. Affidavits from a mayor, planning commission, and others were accepted in one case.²⁰⁷

In United States v. Edge Broadcasting Co.,²⁰⁸ the Supreme Court decided how the advancement of a substantial governmental interest is determined. It held that whether a (expert report); Citizens for Free Speech, LLC v. Cty. of Alameda, 114 F. Supp. 3d 952, 969 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (billboard ban, court relied on evidence presented); Lamar Advert. of Penn, LLC v. Town of Orchard Park, 2008 WL 781865, at *24–25 (W.D.N.Y. Feb. 25, 2008) (public hearing, position papers and studies of various groups); Infinity Outdoor, Inc. v. City of New York, 165 F. Supp. 2d 403, 417 (E.D.N.Y. 2001) (city planning commission report); Burkhart Advert., Inc. v. City of Auburn, Ind., 786 F. Supp. 721, 725 (N.D. Ind. 1991) (transcripts of City Council meetings and depositions and testimony at trial; difficult to show how worse off aesthetic aspects of town would be if billboards were allowed, because total ban existed for at least fifteen years, but “common sense” that billboard exclusion would mitigate or at least not exacerbate sign clutter and promote aesthetics). Compare Harnish v. Manatee Cty, 783 F.2d 1535 (11th Cir. 1986) (upholding prohibition of portable signs and noting that public hearings and workshops were held). See also Geft Outdoor LLC v. Consol. City of Indianapolis & Cty. of Marion, 187 F. Supp. 3d 1002, 1018 (S.D. Ind. 2016) (billboards subject to greater regulation because larger and more of a risk to city’s interest in traffic safety and aesthetics).

²⁰⁵ Desert Outdoor Advert., Inc. v. City of Moreno Valley, 103 F.3d 814, 819 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding city provided no evidence) (1997); Adams Outdoor Advert. of Atlanta, Inc. v. Fulton Cty, 738 F. Supp. 1431, 1433 (N.D. Ga. 1990) (holding interests legitimate but court cannot assume, in the absence of positive evidence, that county actually sought to advance them by restricting constitutionally protected speech); Bell v. Stafford Twp., 541 A.2d 692, 699 (N.J. 1988) (total municipal ban not limited to commercial speech). See also Deperno v. Town of Verona, 2011 WL 4499293, at *9 (N.D.N.Y. Sept. 27, 2011) (holding review required to decide whether sign may cause hazardous or unsafe conditions and to ensure quality of life and character of area; no indication that town officials considered these interests).

²⁰⁶ Tinsley Media, LLC v. Pickens Cty., 203 F. App’x 268, 273–74 (11th Cir. 2006) (will not examine record); Nat’l Advert. Co. v. Town of Babylon, 900 F.2d 551, 555 (2d Cir.) (rejecting preambles and statements elsewhere in ordinances; will not take judicial notice) 498 U.S. 852 (1990); Int’l Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Romulus, 2008 WL 4792645, at *8 (E.D. Mich. Oct. 29, 2008) (rejecting reference to other statutes and broad statements of purpose in zoning ordinance, and statements in related ordinances in other jurisdictions); Adams Outdoor Advert. of Atlanta, Inc. v. Fulton Cty., 738 F. Supp. 1431, 1433 (N.D. Ga. 1990) (holding after the fact invocations not allowed; will not take judicial notice).

²⁰⁷ Harp Advert. of Illinois, Inc. v. Vill. of Chicago Ridge, 1992 WL 386481, at *9 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 13, 1992) (holding affidavits and letters from mayor, planning commission and others supported village justifications). See also Nichols Media Grp., LLC v. Town of Babylon, 365 F. Supp. 2d 295, 308 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) (rejecting studies that attempted to discredit governmental justifications and holding aesthetic and traffic safety goals unequivocally satisfied second criterion, citing Metromedia).

²⁰⁸ 509 U.S. 418 (1993).

commercial speech regulation directly advanced a substantial governmental interest is not decided solely by its application to the speech of the complaining party. The Court upheld a federal statute that prohibited radio stations in nonlottery states from broadcasting lottery advertising. Lower courts struck down the statute as applied to a specific radio station in a nonlottery state but that broadcast into a state that allowed lotteries. They held the statute did not directly advance the governmental interest in discouraging lottery participation where it was prohibited because more than 90 percent of the radio station's audience was in a state that allowed lotteries. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court's as-applied analysis as incorrect under the Central Hudson criteria. Whether a statute directly advances a governmental interest is not answered by considering its application to a single person or entity. The Court held. Its validity depends on the general problem a law seeks to correct.

The cases have applied this decision to sign ordinances. A court of appeals, quoting Edge, rejected an as-applied attack on an ordinance that regulated off-premises and on-premises signs.²⁰⁹ The challenge, the court said, must be to a "broad category of commercial speech," not simply the plaintiff's speech.²¹⁰ As an Ohio court decided in reaching the same conclusion, "the effect of any particular sign on traffic safety and aesthetics would likely be de minimis."²¹¹ The court did not have to consider this.

§ 2:7[7]. Central Hudson's "More Extensive than is Necessary" Criterion

The fourth Central Hudson criterion requires courts to consider whether a regulation is "more extensive than is necessary to serve" a governmental interest. This is a reasonable fit tailoring test,²¹² which the Supreme Court has called the "critical inquiry,"²¹³ and which complements the third "substantially advance" test. The fourth criterion required consideration of alternatives, but it was not clear whether a least restrictive alternative²¹⁴ must be selected instead ²⁰⁹ Lavey v. City of Two Rivers, 171 F.3d 1110 (7th Cir. 1999).

²¹⁰ Id. at 1115 n. 18.

²¹¹ Suburban Lodge of America v. City of Columbus Graphics Comm'n, 761 N.E.2d 1060, 1066 (Ohio App. 2000), appeal dismissed, 759 N.E.2d 1260 (Ohio 2002).

²¹² Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly, 533 U.S. 525, 556 (2001).

²¹³ Central Hudson Gas & Elec. Co. v. Public Service Comm'n, 447 U.S. 557, 569 (1980).

²¹⁴ The Court used this phrase when it discussed this requirement as it might apply under the fourth Central Hudson criterion, but the phrase "less-restrictive means" also has been used to describe this requirement in other regulatory of an alternative put forward by a municipality.²¹⁵ As an example, if a municipality decides to prohibit digital billboards a claim could be made the prohibition is not narrowly tailored because rules for the safe display of digital billboards are an alternative.

The Court liberally applied the fourth criterion shortly after Central Hudson in the Metromedia case.²¹⁶ There it deferentially upheld a ban on billboards and dealt curtly with an argument that the billboard ban was more extensive than necessary by deferring to the city's legislative judgment.

A case decided a few years later, Posadas de Puerto Rico Associates v. Tourism Co.,²¹⁷ was even more permissive and upheld a Puerto Rico statute that prohibited casino advertising to Commonwealth residents. It again dealt curtly with the fourth Central Hudson criterion, rejecting a government-sponsored advertising campaign to discourage gambling by residents as a less burdensome means. It was “up to the legislature” to decide whether this less burdensome means would be effective.²¹⁸

An explanatory interpretation of this fourth Central Hudson criterion came a few years later in Board of Trustees of the State University of New York v. Fox.²¹⁹ The Court upheld a state university regulation that did not allow “private commercial enterprises” to operate on state campuses, which the university applied to prohibit a demonstration of commercial products in a student dormitory. The Court clarified the need to consider alternatives by holding the university did not have to select a less burdensome means.²²⁰ It also called the fourth criterion an ends and contexts.

²¹⁵ In this treatise, the term “municipality” includes a city, county, township, or town.

²¹⁶ Metromedia, Inc. v. City of San Diego, 453 U.S. 490 (1981).

²¹⁷ 478 U.S. 328 (1986). The trial court narrowed the statute and its regulations by permitting certain local advertising addressed to tourists even though it might incidentally reach the attention of residents, and adopted other exceptions.

²¹⁸ Id. at 344. The authority of this case is questionable, however. See Greater New Orleans Broad. Ass'n v. United States, 527 U.S. 173, 187 (1999) (striking down federal legislation prohibiting advertising for gambling; statute and exemptions pierced with exceptions and inconsistencies).

²¹⁹ 492 U.S. 469 (1989). For a case applying Fox to uphold offsite advertising regulations see Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. City of New York, 594 F.3d 94, 104, 105 (2d Cir. 2010) (“That the City considered, and rejected, an alternative scheme is of no constitutional moment.”).

²²⁰ The Court commented “The ample scope of regulatory authority ... [over commercial speech] would be illusory if it were subject to a least-restrictive-means requirement, which imposes a heavy burden on the State.” Id. at 477.

means test, and adopted a deferential “reasonableness” standard of judicial review:²²¹

What our decisions require is a “‘fit’ between the legislature’s ends and the means chosen to accomplish those ends,” [citing Posadas] -- a fit that is not necessarily perfect, but reasonable; that represents not necessarily the single best disposition but one whose scope is “in proportion to the interest served,” [citing case]; that employs not necessarily the least restrictive means but, as we have put it ..., a means narrowly tailored to achieve the desired objective. Within those bounds we leave it to governmental decisionmakers to judge what manner of regulation may best be employed.²²²

The Court nevertheless emphasized that it required “the government goal to be substantial, and the cost to be carefully calculated.”²²³ The government has the burden of proof.

A few years later, however, in City of Cincinnati v. Discovery Network,²²⁴ the Court applied the fourth Central Hudson criterion to strike down an ordinance that prohibited news racks that distributed commercial handbills on public property but did not prohibit newspapers. For purposes of the decision, the Court assumed the ordinance prohibited commercial but allowed noncommercial, speech.²²⁵ This distinction, the Court held, bore no relationship to the interests the city asserted. The city’s interest in aesthetics was not served because the news racks containing commercial handbills were no more unattractive than news racks containing newspapers. A bare assertion of the low value of commercial speech was not enough for this selective ban. The city had not established “a ‘reasonable fit’ between its legitimate interests in safety and aesthetics and its choice of a limited and selective prohibition on news racks as the means chosen to serve those interests.”²²⁶ In addition, the regulation was content-based because its basis was the difference in content between ordinary newspapers and commercial speech.²²⁷

²²¹ But see Todd J. Locher, Comment, Board of Trustees of the State University of New York v. Fox: Cutting Back on Commercial Speech Standards, 75 Iowa L. Rev. 1335 (1990) (arguing Fox cut back on judicial review standards for reviewing laws affecting commercial speech).

²²² Id. at 480.

²²³ Id.

²²⁴ 507 U.S. 410 (1993). See 107 Harv. L. Rev. 224 (1993).

²²⁵ The Court held that its holding was narrow. It did “not reach the question whether, given certain facts and under certain circumstances, a community might be able to justify differential treatment of commercial and noncommercial news racks.” Id.

²²⁶ Id. at 416.

²²⁷ Another criterion that certainly weighed on the calculation of costs and benefits was the city’s reliance on an

A footnote²²⁸ distinguished the Metromedia decision because the ordinance in that case treated two types of commercial speech differently by banning outdoor but permitting on-site commercial advertising. In another footnote, the Court clarified the standard of judicial review that should apply. It rejected “mere rational-basis review,” but did not reject Fox by adopting a less-burdensome means test. However, “if there are numerous and obvious less-burdensome alternatives to the restriction on commercial speech, which is certainly a relevant consideration in determining whether the ‘fit’ between ends and means is reasonable.”²²⁹ The city had not “carefully calculated” the costs and benefits associated with the ban because it failed to consider regulating their size, shape, appearance or number as a less-burdensome means.

Discovery Network has had a mixed response in the lower courts. They rejected the decision when they upheld a sign ordinance.²³⁰ They relied on it to strike down a sign ordinance when it was content-based or failed one of the Central Hudson criteria, but it was not always a dominant factor.²³¹

Later Supreme Court cases either struck down or upheld commercial speech regulations outdated regulation, aimed at littering, which it used to ban commercial handbills from distribution on public property.

²²⁸ Discovery Network, 507 U.S., at 425, n.20.

²²⁹ Id. at 418, n.13. Chief Justice Rehnquist, dissenting, believed the Court had revived the discredited less-burdensome means test. Id. at 441.

²³⁰ Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. City of New York, 594 F.3d 94, 108 (2d Cir.) (outdoor commercial advertising); Metro Lights, L.L.C. v. City of Los Angeles, 551 F.3d 898, 911 (9th Cir.) (distinguishing” offsite commercial signage concentrated and controlled at transit stops and uncontrolled, private, offsite commercial signage); RTM Media, L.L.C. v. City Of Houston, 584 F.3d 220, 226 (5th Cir. 2009) (billboards); Riel v. City of Bradford, 485 F.3d 736, 753 (3d Cir. 2007) (signs excluded in historic district); Lavey v. City of Two Rivers, 171 F.3d 1110, 1116 (7th Cir. 1999) (commercial v. noncommercial distinction); Contest Promotions, LLC v. City & Cty. of San Francisco, 2017 WL 76896, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 9, 2017) (regulation of off-premises and on-premises signs); B & B Coastal Enterprises, Inc. v. Demers, 276 F. Supp. 2d 155, 166 (D. Me. 2003) (exemptions); Infinity Outdoor, Inc. v. City of New York, 165 F. Supp. 2d 403, 421 (E.D.N.Y. 2001) (billboard regulation).

²³¹ Pagan v. Fruchey, 492 F.3d 766, 778 (6th Cir.) (holding that posting for sale signs on vehicles; did not substantially advance regulatory objectives); Ballen v. City of Redmond, 466 F.3d 736, 743 (9th Cir. 2006) (exemptions from ordinance prohibiting political signs); Whitton v. City of Gladstone, Mo., 54 F.3d 1400, 1404 (8th Cir. 1995) (holding restrictions on political signs content-based); Kersten v. City of Mandan, 389 F. Supp. 3d 640, 646 (D.N.D. 2019) (mural ordinance; probable success showing it was content-based); Vono v. Lewis, 594 F. Supp. 2d 189, 195 (D.R.I. 2009) (state billboard law); Burkow v. City of Los Angeles, 119 F. Supp. 2d 1076, 1081 (C.D. Cal. 2000) (holding ordinance prohibiting for sale signs on cars not narrowly tailored); N. Olmsted Chamber of Commerce v. City of N. Olmsted, 86 F. Supp. 2d 755, 770 (N.D. Ohio 2000) (content-based signage; Discovery Network provides extra bite). See also Metro Lights, L.L.C. v. City of Los Angeles, 551 F.3d 898, 905 (9th Cir.) (applying Discovery Network but upholding ordinance) (2009).

under the fourth Central Hudson criterion, but did not always consider the less-burdensome means requirement nor did they clarify how the Fox and Discovery Network decisions applied it.²³² One of these cases is an important advertising case discussed earlier, Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly.²³³ The Court struck down Massachusetts regulations that prohibited advertising of smokeless tobacco and cigars within 1000 feet of schools or playgrounds, which the state adopted to protect youth from the harm of smoking. Noting that the regulations prohibited advertising in a substantial portion of major metropolitan areas in the state, the Court held their uniformly broad geographical sweep demonstrated a lack of tailoring. In addition, a ban on all signs of any size was “ill-suited to target the problem of highly visible billboards, as opposed to smaller signs.”²³⁴ To the extent that studies identified advertising and promotional practices that appealed to youth, “tailoring would involve targeting those practices while permitting others.”²³⁵ The regulations made no such distinction. They failed the fourth Central Hudson criterion because they impinged unduly on the ability to propose a commercial transaction, and the opportunity of an adult listener to obtain information about products.

The Court did not discuss the Metromedia case, which upheld a ban on commercial billboards in San Diego under the fourth Central Hudson criterion. The purpose for which the ban ²³² United States v. Edge Broadcasting Co., 509 U.S. 418, 430 (1993) (citing Fox but not Discovery Network and upholding federal statute that prohibited broadcasting stations from advertising state-run lotteries in a state that did not run a lottery; “reasonable fit” satisfied by holding that the prohibition “advances the governmental interest in enforcing the restriction in nonlottery States, while not interfering with the policy of lottery States like Virginia.”); Rubin v. Coors Brewing Co., 514 U.S. 476 (1995) (striking down federal statute that prohibited disclosure of alcohol content of beer on labels or in advertising and holding that other alternatives to the prohibition existed, such as directly limiting the alcohol content of beer); Florida Bar v. Went for It, 515 U.S. 618 (1995) (upholding Florida Bar’s restriction on targeted mail, and finding many alternatives for “communicating necessary information about attorneys;” Fox and Discovery Network quoted); Greater New Orleans Broadcasting Ass’n v. United States, 527 U.S. 173 (1999) (same; invalidating federal scheme for regulating broadcast of gambling advertisement because “pierced by exemptions and inconsistencies”); Thompson v. Western States Medical Center, 535 U.S. 357 (U.S. 2002) (striking down ban on advertising compounded drugs; government must “achieve its interests in a manner that does not restrict speech, or that restricts less speech;” Fox and Discovery Network not cited).

²³³ 533 U.S. 525, 561-566 (2001). Following Lorillard: N.A. of Tobacco Outlets v. City of Worcester, 851 F. Supp.2d 311 (D. Mass. 2012) (city ordinance prohibiting outdoor advertising of tobacco products). Cf. 44 Liquormart v. State of Rhode Island, 517 U.S. 484 (1996) (invalidating state statute prohibiting price advertising of liquor products; plurality opinion per Stevens, J.; “perfectly obvious that alternative forms of regulation that would not involve any restriction on speech would be more likely to achieve the State’s goal of promoting temperance”), discussed in 110 Harv. L. Rev. 216 (1996).

²³⁴ Id. at 564.

²³⁵ Id.

was adopted distinguishes the two decisions. In Metromedia, the purpose was to further the aesthetic and traffic safety interests of the city, and the Court held that only a billboard ban could be effective. In Lorillard, the purpose was to protect youth from the harm of tobacco, and the state could have adopted some means other than a ban. Nevertheless, as in Metromedia, the Court in Lorillard could have held a ban on advertising as the only effective way to protect youth from the harm of tobacco. Its close examination of the narrow tailoring requirement shows it might be equally as demanding when it considers other sign ordinances.

The Supreme Court's application of the fourth Central Hudson criterion has been mixed. Discovery Network modified the generous interpretation adopted in Fox, but the Court in later decisions did not reconcile the tension between the two cases and did not always rely on either one. Later cases may have modified its earlier relaxed application of the test in Metromedia to uphold a ban on billboards. The Court has also been inconsistent in applying the less-burdensome means requirement. It was quick to find that less-burdensome means were required as an alternative when it held a law invalid, but sometimes ignored such possibilities when it upheld a law. What emerges is a case-by-case examination of free speech principles that does not produce a bright line rule.

§ 2:8. Time, Place, and Manner Regulations

§ 2:8[1]. What They Are

Long before the Supreme Court adopted its four criteria for reviewing laws regulating commercial speech in Central Hudson, it adopted rules for free speech cases that it called time, place, and manner regulations.²³⁶ These rules had their origin in early licensing cases, where the Court upheld content-neutral regulations that applied to a public forum, such as regulations for licensing the time, place, and manner of parades on public streets.²³⁷ Courts apply and uphold time, place, and manner regulations to sign ordinances outside public forums.²³⁸

²³⁶ Daniel R. Mandelker, Billboards, Signs, Free Speech, and the First Amendment, 55 Real Prop. Tr. & Est. L.J. 367, 402-406 (2020) (discussing time, place, and manner regulations); R. George Wright, Time, Place, and Manner Restrictions on Speech, 40 N. Ill. U. L. Rev. 265, 266 (2020).

²³⁷ E.g., Cox v. New Hampshire, 312 U.S. 569 (1941) (licensing upheld). For discussion of this history see Susan H. Williams, Content Discrimination and the First Amendment, 139 U. Pa. L. Rev. 615, 636-645 (1991).

²³⁸ E.g., New S. Media Grp., LLC v. City of Huntsville, 2021 WL 5822133, at *14 (N.D. Ala. Oct. 1, 2021) (size, height, setback, square footage, and other time, place, and manner restrictions on signs supported substantial interest in promoting the “public health, safety, morals, convenience, order, prosperity, and general welfare of the city”).

Ward v. Rock Against Racism²³⁹ is the classic case that explains Supreme Court doctrine on time, place, and manner regulations. New York City regulated the volume of amplified music that could be played at rock concerts at a park band shell. It had to be satisfactory to the audience, but could not intrude on those using an adjacent quiet grassy area designated for passive recreation, or on those living in nearby apartments and residences. The Court decided the case as if the band shell were a public forum, where the government’s right to regulate free speech is subject to First Amendment protections. It held:

Our cases make clear, however, that even in a public forum the government may impose reasonable restrictions on the time, place, or manner of protected speech, provided (1) the restrictions “are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech,” (2) that they are narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest, and (3) that they leave open ample alternative channels for communication of the information.”²⁴⁰

The Court also held that a regulation must not be substantially broader than necessary, and may not burden a substantial portion of speech in a manner that does not achieve its goals. Narrow tailoring is met if the “regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation.”²⁴¹ The adoption of a less burdensome alternative is not required. “[O]ur cases quite clearly hold that restrictions on the time, place, or manner of protected speech are not invalid ‘simply because there is some imaginable alternative that might be less burdensome on speech.’”²⁴²

The Court rewrote the first rule because the Court in Reed inverted it by holding that laws that cannot be “justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech” are content-based.²⁴³ The narrow tailoring and alternative channels rules add to the factors adopted in Metromedia for commercial speech.

These differences between the Metromedia factors and the time, place, and manner rules

²³⁹ Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781(1989).

²⁴⁰ Id. at 791, citing cases. Numbering has been added to the quotation.

²⁴¹ Ward, 491 U.S. at 799, quoting United States v. Albertini, 472 U.S. 675 (1985). The Court added that judges do not have to agree that a “regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation,” or on the degree to which those interests should be promoted. Id. at 800.

²⁴² Ward, 491 U.S. at 797, quoting United States v. Albertini, 472 U.S. 675, 689 (1985). The dissenting Justices disagreed with this holding.

²⁴³ Reed, 502 U.S. at 164.

suggest that they require different results,²⁴⁴ but the Court has held that they are “substantially similar.”²⁴⁵ The Seventh Circuit attempted to reconcile these different applications of Supreme Court tests by holding that the narrow tailoring factor “aligns with the Central Hudson intermediate-scrutiny test for regulations on commercial speech, which the Court applied in Metromedia and the judge used here.”²⁴⁶ This decision is debatable.

Differences remain, and the Court applies both rules alternatively without explaining when which set of rules should apply or whether they should be used together. It also applies both sets of rules at the same time without indicating whether or when it is necessary to apply both.²⁴⁷

§ 2:8[2]. As Applied to Sign Ordinances

Supreme Court cases that have applied the time, place, and manner rules to sign ordinances reach different results and provide inconsistent guidance on when the Court will uphold a sign ordinance as a time, place, and manner regulation. In the first case, *Linmark v. Township of Willingboro*²⁴⁸ decided before Central Hudson, the ordinance banned for sale and sold signs, except signs on model homes, to prevent white flight from the township and promote racial integration. The Court held the ordinance was not a time, place, and manner regulation because ample alternate channels of communication were not available. Alternatives, such as newspaper advertising and listing with real estate agents, were less effective because they were less likely to reach persons not deliberately seeking sales information. Neither was the ordinance “genuinely” concerned with the place and manner of speech on the signs. It was content-based because it regulated particular signs based on their content, but the township’s interest in regulating content ²⁴⁴ For an early article explaining these differences, see Elisabeth Alden Longworthy, Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions on Commercial Speech, 52 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 127 (1983).

²⁴⁵ Bd. of Trustees of State Univ. of New York v. Fox, 492 U.S. 469, 477 (1989). See also Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly, 533 U.S. 525, 554 (2001) (tests substantially similar, citing Fox); United States v. Edge Broadcasting Co., 509 U.S. 418, 430 (1993) (“the validity of time, place, or manner restrictions is determined under standards very similar to those applicable in the commercial speech context”); San Francisco Arts & Athletics, Inc. v. United States Olympic Comm., 483 U.S. 522, 537 n.16 (1987) (tests substantially similar). See E & J Equities, LLC v. Bd. of Adjustment of the Twp. of Franklin, 146 A.3d 623, 641 (N.J. 2016) (discussing both tests and deciding that time, place, and manner rules applied).

²⁴⁶ Adams Outdoor Advertising Ltd. Partnership v. City of Madison, 56 F.4th 1111, 1120 (7th Cir. 2023).

²⁴⁷ E.g., City of Cincinnati v. Discovery Network, Inc., 507 U.S. 410 (1993) (invalidating city ordinance excluding news racks with commercial handbills).

²⁴⁸ 431 U.S. 85 (1977).

was not enough to save the ordinance.²⁴⁹

Time, place, and manner issues appeared next in the Metromedia case,²⁵⁰ where a plurality upheld a ban on commercial billboards but struck down exemptions that favored some noncommercial signs over others. Its discussion of the city's time, place, and manner defense appears in that part of the opinion dealing with exemptions, where it was curtly rejected.

The plurality held the ordinance was not a "manner" regulation because signs were banned everywhere, an apparent reference to the ban on noncommercial billboards.²⁵¹ This is puzzling because the Court upheld the billboard ban in Metromedia under the Central Hudson criteria. Neither was the ordinance a time, place, and manner regulation. It could not be assumed that "alternative channels" were available because the parties stipulated just the opposite: "Many businesses and politicians and other persons rely upon outdoor advertising because other forms of advertising are insufficient, inappropriate and prohibitively expensive."²⁵² The Supreme Court has now held that the Metromedia plurality should be treated as a majority opinion.

The Court applied time, place, and manner rules in other cases where a sign ordinance prohibited signs. It upheld an ordinance prohibiting signs on public property in Taxpayers for Vincent v. City of Los Angeles.²⁵³ The ordinance was narrowly tailored as "[t]he incidental restriction on expression which results from the City's attempt to accomplish such a purpose is considered justified as a reasonable regulation of the time, place, or manner of expression if it is ²⁴⁹ The goal of stable, racially integrated housing did not save the Willingboro ordinance, because the evidence did not show that the ordinance was needed for this purpose. Id. at 94-95. This holding suggests that the ordinance did not meet the Central Hudson criterion that requires a regulation to directly serve a governmental interest. The Court also held that the ordinance prevented citizens of the township from obtaining vital information because the township feared homeowners would make decisions inimical to its interests by leaving if sale and rental information could be displayed on signs. Relying on an earlier case, Virginia Pharmacy Bd. v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, 425 U.S. 748. (1976), the Court rejected the "claim that the only way it could enable its citizens to find their self-interest was to deny them information that is neither false nor misleading." Linmark, 431 U.S. at 97. A court today would probably hold that the governmental interest was not compelling because the ordinance was content-based.

²⁵⁰ Metromedia, Inc. v. City of San Diego, 453 U.S. 490 (1981).

²⁵¹ But see Susan H. Williams, Content Discrimination and the First Amendment, 139 U. Pa. L. Rev. 615, 637 (1991) (arguing that the time, place, and manner doctrine applies to total bans).

²⁵² Id. at 516, citing the Joint Stipulation of Facts.

²⁵³ 466 U.S. 789 (1984). This case was decided five years before the Court restated the time, place, and manner rules in Ward v. Rock Against Racism. The analysis of free speech issues in Vincent is mixed. See Susan H. Williams, Content Discrimination and the First Amendment, 139 U. Pa. L. Rev. 615, 650-651 (1991). See also, Clark v. Community for Creative Non-Violence, 468 U.S. 288 (1984), decided six weeks later.

narrowly tailored to serve that interest.”²⁵⁴

Alternative modes of expression were adequate. Individuals could speak and distribute literature at the same place where the ordinance prohibited the posting of signs. Any advantage obtained by the posting of political signs was available by other means. “[N]othing in the findings indicates that the posting of political posters on public property is a uniquely valuable or important mode of communication.”²⁵⁵ In a footnote, the Court added that it had shown “special solicitude” for expressive forms that were less expensive than feasible alternatives, but that “this solicitude has practical boundaries.”²⁵⁶

Ten years after *Vincent City of Ladue v. Gilleo*²⁵⁷ rejected a time, place, and manner justification for an ordinance that prohibited a political sign on the lawn of a home that opposed the Persian Gulf war. The ordinance allowed the display in residential areas of residence identification signs, for sale signs, and signs warning of safety hazards. Commercial establishments, churches, and nonprofit private organizations could display signs that the ordinance did not allow in residential areas. Ladue claimed that residents could convey their messages by other means, such as hand-held signs, speeches, and banners. The Court disagreed, holding that “[r]esidential signs are an unusually cheap and convenient form of communication,”²⁵⁸ and that a sign displayed from a residence can often carry a message quite distinct from placing a message someplace else.

The Court’s application of the alternate channels of communication requirement in these

²⁵⁴ Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. at 808. The city “did no more than eliminate the exact source of the evil it sought to remedy” by prohibiting signs that caused visual clutter and blight. The ordinance curtailed no more speech than was necessary to achieve its purpose.

²⁵⁵ Id. at 811. The Court added that ever-increasing restrictions on expression did not threaten plaintiffs’ ability to communicate effectively.

²⁵⁶ Id. n.30.

²⁵⁷ 512 U.S. 43 (1994). For discussion of the Ladue case, see Note, Stephanie L. Bunting, Unsightly Politics: Aesthetics, Sign Ordinances, and Homeowners’ Speech in City of Ladue v. Gilleo, 20 Harv. Envtl. L. Rev. 473 (1996). For discussion by the lawyers who argued the case see Jordan B. Cherrick, Do Communities Have the Right to Protect Homeowners from Sign Pollution?: The Supreme Court Says No in City of Ladue v. Gilleo, 14 St. Louis U. Pub. L. Rev. 399 (1995) (attorney for city); Gerald P. Greiman, City of Ladue v. Gilleo: Free Speech for Signs, A God Sign for Free Speech, 14 St. Louis U. Pub. L. Rev. 439 (1995) (attorney for plaintiff).

²⁵⁸ Ladue, 512 U.S. at 56. The Court earlier assumed the ordinance was content- and viewpoint-neutral. Id. at 46. Justice O’Connor’s concurring opinion disagreed with this characterization. Id. at 59.

cases is inconsistent. It is difficult to see why alternate modes of expression were adequate in the Vincent case but not in the Ladue case, unless the display of political signs on residential property, is more protected under free speech law than posting political signs on public property. The sign displayed in the Ladue case was an opinion sign, while the sign displayed in the Vincent case was a political campaign sign, but this difference did not seem to influence the Court.

The Court made an oblique reference to time, place, and manner regulations in City of Austin v. Reagan Nat'l Advert. of Austin, LLC.²⁵⁹ It held that “the ([c]ity’s on-/off-premises distinction is more like ordinary time, place, or manner restrictions, which do not require the application of strict scrutiny.” The Court also applied one of the factors courts must consider when they review time, place, and manner regulations when it remanded its decision to the Fifth Circuit to consider whether there was evidence of impermissible purpose or justification and whether the sign ordinance did not survive intermediate scrutiny because it was not narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest.

The Fifth Circuit on remand characterized the case as a narrow tailoring case but applied Metromedia’s holding that the off-premises vs. on-premises distinction was constitutional. The problem is that Metromedia did not apply narrow tailoring but applied the Central Hudson factors.²⁶⁰

§ 2:9. The Prior Restraint Doctrine

§ 2:9[1]. General Principles

Prior restraints²⁶¹ are the most serious and least tolerable restrictions on free speech rights.²⁶² A prior restraint occurs when a law like a sign ordinance includes a discretionary ²⁵⁹ 596 U.S. 61 (2022).

²⁶⁰ Reagan Nat'l Advert. of Austin, Inc. v. City of Austin, 64 F.4th 287, 293 (5th Cir. 2023). See also Florek v. Bedora, 2023 WL 2808313, at *5 (E.D. Wis. Apr. 6, 2023) (ordinance not narrowly tailored, “City cannot claim that placing strict size and time limits on certain signs is “necessary to beautify” or declutter the City while at the same time allowing other signs “that create the same problem” to be larger or displayed indefinitely); city has “not established that certain ‘signs pose a greater threat to safety than’ any other types of signs or that limiting certain signs will assist individuals in identifying signs being utilized for business purposes;” ample content neutral options available).

²⁶¹ Daniel R. Mandelker, Decisionmaking in Sign Codes: The Prior Restraint Barrier, Zoning and Planning Law Report, Vol. 31, (discussing standing to challenge laws as prior restraint and validity of substantive standards), <https://tinyurl.com/priorres>. See Spring House Com., LLC v. City of Richmond, 2022 WL 17406310, at *8 (E.D. Ky. Dec. 2, 2022) (new application process for off-premises commercial signs did not constitute prior restraint because it applies to any type of unclassified use, not just those uses involving protected speech or other expressive conduct).

²⁶² Nebraska Press Ass’n v. Stuart, 427 U.S. 539, 559 (1976). Some courts indicated that whether the prior restraint doctrine applies to commercial speech is an open question. E.g., Hunt v. City of Los Angeles, 638 F.3d 708, 718 n.3

procedure for the review of an application for a permit application or other government prerequisite that requires the exercise of free expression.²⁶³ An application for a sign permit or sign variance in a sign ordinance or design review procedures²⁶⁴ are examples. A discretionary review procedure in a sign ordinance is invalid as a prior restraint unless it contains adequate procedural and substantive standards.²⁶⁵ Procedural standards prevent delays in decision-making. Substantive standards prevent arbitrary decisions. The burden to show that procedural and substantive standards are adequate is a heavy one.²⁶⁶

GEFT Outdoor, LLC v. Monroe County,²⁶⁷ adopted a multi-factor rule for prior restraints. It held that censorship concerns motivate these limitations, but they are not per se unconstitutional. They are constitutionally sound time, place, or manner restrictions if they are content neutral, are narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest, leave open alternative avenues for speech, and do not put too much discretion in the hands of government officials. The court also explained that the review of content-neutral prior restraints is more flexible than the review of content-based restraints.

§ 2:9[2]. The Procedural Standards

The leading Supreme Court case on procedural standards is Freedman v. Maryland,²⁶⁸ which held invalid a statute that required a state board of censors to approve movies before they (9th Cir. 2011), quoting Central Hudson Gas & Elec. Co. v. Public Service Comm'n, 447 U.S. 557, 571 n.13 (1980) (“We have observed that commercial speech is such a sturdy brand of expression that traditional prior restraint doctrine may not apply to it.”).

²⁶³ The prior restraint doctrine does not apply to legislative decisions. An exception is when a legislature reserves decision making authority to itself. World Wide Rush, LLC v. City of Los Angeles, 606 F.3d 676, 688 (9th Cir. 2010). Compare Lacroix v. Town of Fort Myers Beach, 2021 WL 1087217, at *4 (M.D. Fla. Mar. 22, 2021) (ordinance prohibiting portable signs did not raise prior restraint problem). See GEFT Outdoor, L.L.C. v. City of Westfield, 491 F. Supp. 3d 387, 408 (S.D. Ind. 2020) (requiring permit for all signs but exempting content-based signs from permit requirement held an impermissible prior restraint, decision questionable under Supreme Court’s Reagan decision).

²⁶⁴ Street Graphics, supra note 3, at 87 (discussing design review); Id. § 1.12, at 88 (authorizing Program for Graphics, which includes design review).

²⁶⁵ For a detailed review of Supreme Court cases on the prior restraint doctrine as it applies to signs see Brian W. Blaesser & Alan C. Weinstein, Federal Land Use Law and Litigation §§ 4:26-4:30.

²⁶⁶ Organization for a Better Austin v. Keefe, 402 U.S. 415, 419 (1971).

²⁶⁷ 62 F.4th 321, 327 (7th Cir. 2023).

²⁶⁸ 380 U.S. 51(1965).

could be shown. The Court adopted three procedural standards: The government has the burden of initiating judicial review, prompt judicial review within a specified brief period is required, and any restraint before judicial review must be limited to the shortest period compatible with a sound judicial resolution.²⁶⁹ These standards are called the “Freedman Standards,” after the case that adopted them. A court may find a sign ordinance invalid if the Freedman standards are not met.²⁷⁰

Later Supreme Court cases do not entirely explain how courts should apply the Freedman Standards to land use regulations like sign ordinances. *FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas*²⁷¹ considered the Freedman Standards as applied to a conditional use permit for an adult business, a use protected as free speech. A plurality of three Supreme Court Justices accepted the legitimate and customary role that licensing plays in land use laws and found a weaker inference that censorship is involved in such laws, as in the Freedman case. For adult uses it applied only two of the three Freedman standards: that a decision must occur within a specified reasonable time during which the status quo is maintained, and that there must be prompt judicial review. A later Supreme Court decision²⁷² in an adult use case held a state’s ordinary rules of judicial review were adequate to meet the prompt judicial review requirement. This case means that state judicial review procedures will also satisfy the prompt judicial review Freedman standard for sign ordinances.²⁷³

A later case, Thomas v. Chicago Park District,²⁷⁴ created an exemption from the Freedman Standards that may apply to content-neutral sign and other ordinances and may mean these ordinances do not need time limits. The Thomas case upheld a Chicago ordinance that required a permit for large-scale events in public parks. It concluded that “Freedman is inapposite because ²⁶⁹ These are the standards as restated in Blount v. Rizzi, 400 U.S. 410, 417 (1971).

²⁷⁰ GEFT Outdoor, L.L.C. v. Monroe Cnty., 2021 WL 5494483, at *10 (S.D. Ind. Nov. 23, 2021) (standards did not require that a permit or variance be issued within a reasonable period of time, no prompt judicial review); XXL of Ohio, Inc. v. City of Broadview Heights, 341 F. Supp. 2d 765, 801 (N.D. Ohio 2004) (permit scheme invalid even if content-neutral because does not contain any of the procedural safeguards potentially applicable to permit schemes).

²⁷¹ FW/PBS, Inc. v. Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 227 (1990). The Court was split three ways in three opinions, each with three Justices.

²⁷² City of Littleton v. Z. J. Gifts D-4, L.L.C., 541 U.S. 774 (2004). The Court also held the ordinance did not involve censorship because it had neutral and nondiscretionary criteria that applied to the operation of adult businesses.

²⁷³ But see Lusk v. Village of Cold Spring, 475 F.3d 480, 492 n.14 (2d Cir. 2007) (licensing scheme not brief, no judicial review, and village not required to initiate litigation when disapproving a sign).

²⁷⁴ 534 U.S. 316 (2002), noted, 12 Seton Hall Const. L.J. 825 (2002). See also Robert H. Whorf, The Dangerous Intersection at “Prior Restraint” and “Time, Place, Manner”: A Comment on Thomas v. Chicago Park District, 3 Barry L. Rev. 1, 8026 (2002).

the licensing scheme at issue here is not subject-matter censorship but content-neutral time, place, and manner regulation of the use of a public forum.”²⁷⁵ Public forum regulations for parks that ensure safety and convenience, it held, were consistent with civil liberties, and provide the good order on which civil liberties ultimately depend. This traditional exercise of authority did not raise censorship concerns that required “the extraordinary procedural safeguards on the film licensing process in Freedman.” The Court distinguished FW/PBS, where it had applied two of the Freedman Standards because it “involved a licensing scheme that ‘targeted businesses purveying sexually explicit speech.’”²⁷⁶ Like the licensing scheme in Thomas, sign ordinances that are content-neutral should be considered a traditional exercise of authority exempt from the Freedman Standards because they do not involve censorship.²⁷⁷

The rejection of the Freedman Standards in the Thomas case should include a rejection of the 28-day time limit requirement in the ordinance, but the case created confusion because the Court did not discuss it.²⁷⁸ This omission makes it unclear whether the Court’s mention of the time limit means a time limit is required, even in content-neutral laws. Several federal courts have not adopted this interpretation, and read Thomas to mean that sign ordinances do not require time limits if they are content-neutral, like the regulation in that case.²⁷⁹ The Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, for example, reached this conclusion in a case involving an adult business ordinance.

²⁷⁵ Thomas, 534 U.S. at 322.

²⁷⁶ Id. n. 2. This statement is puzzling, because the Court had previously held that a zoning ordinance regulating adult uses was content-neutral. City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41 (1986).

²⁷⁷ The Court’s statement in Thomas, that the permit ordinance was a time, place and manner regulation, may present a problem for sign ordinances because the tests for time, place and manner regulations are somewhat different from, though similar to, the Central Hudson tests for commercial speech. See § 2:7. However, the Court in Thomas merely mentioned that the permit ordinance was a time, place and manner regulation and did not actually apply the rules for these regulations to the permit ordinance.

²⁷⁸ Id. at 318.

²⁷⁹ Covenant Media of S.C., LLC v. City of N. Charleston, 493 F.3d 421 (4th Cir. 2007); Granite State Outdoor Adver., Inc. v. City of Clearwater, 351 F.3d 1112 (11th Cir. 2003); Granite State Outdoor Adver., Inc. v. City of St. Petersburg, 348 F.3d 1278 (11th Cir. 2003); National Adver. Co. v. City of Miami, 287 F. Supp. 2d 1349 (S.D. Fla. 2003); B & B Coastal Enters. v. Demers, 276 F. Supp. 2d 155 (D. Me. 2003); Lamar Adver. Co. v. City of Douglasville, 254 F. Supp. 2d 1321 (N.D. Ga. 2003). Accord in cases not involving sign ordinances: Southern Oregon Barter Fair v. Jackson County, 372 F.3d 1128 (9th Cir. 2004) (Oregon Mass Gathering Act); Griffin v. Secretary of Veterans Affairs, 288 F.3d 1309 (Fed. Cir. 2002) (regulation applied to prohibit display of Confederate flag at national cemetery; procedural requirements apply only to explicit censorship schemes). But see Solantic, LLC v. City of Neptune Beach, 410 F.3d 1250 (11th Cir. Fla. 2005) (time limits required when ordinance content-based).

Requiring time limits, it held, would “negate” the holding in Thomas that content-neutral time, place, and manner regulations do not have to meet the Freedman Standards.²⁸⁰

Despite these cases, local governments should use caution in omitting time limits from permitting and other procedures in sign ordinances that require discretionary decision-making. A sign ordinance can omit time limits if it is content-neutral, but difficulties in defining content neutrality mean it is difficult to decide whether a court will find an ordinance content-based if it is challenged in court. Including acceptable time limits avoids the risk that a sign ordinance is an invalid prior restraint. If an ordinance is required but does not contain time limits, a court will hold it invalid.²⁸¹

§ 2:9[3]. The Substantive Standards

If an ordinance is a prior restraint on speech it requires clear substantive standards for discretionary administrative and executive decisions, even if it is content-neutral. As the Supreme Court held in the Thomas case,²⁸² “[w]here the licensing official enjoys unduly broad discretion in determining whether to grant or deny a permit, there is a risk that he will favor or disfavor speech based on its content.” This rule is well established. As another Supreme Court case added, “a law subjecting the exercise of First Amendment freedoms to the prior restraint of a license, without narrow, objective, and definite standards to guide the licensing authority, is unconstitutional.”²⁸³ However, the Court in Thomas added that “Most laws are uncertain at their borders, but even in ²⁸⁰ H.D.V. - Greektown, LLC v. City of Detroit, 568 F.3d 609 (6th Cir. 2009).

²⁸¹ Adams Outdoor Advert. Ltd. P'ship by Adams Outdoor GP, LLC v. Pennsylvania Dep't of Transportation, 930 F.3d 199, 208 (3d Cir. 2019) (outdoor advertising act); Citizens for Free Speech, LLC v. County of Alameda, 62 F. Supp. 3d 1129, 1142 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (no time limits for discretionary decisions); Nittany Outdoor Advert., LLC v. College Twp., 22 F. Supp. 3d 392, 412 (M.D. Pa. 2014); Mahaney v. City of Englewood, 226 P.3d 1214 (Colo. App. 2009) (wall murals in sign ordinance; Thomas not cited).

²⁸² Thomas, 534 U.S. at 323. The Court has also pointed out that the absence of precise standards makes it impossible to distinguish between “a licensor’s legitimate denial of a permit and its illegitimate abuse of censorial power.” City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Pub. Co., 486 U.S. 750, 758 (1988). See Heffron v. Intl. Soc’y for Krishna Consciousness, Inc., 452 U.S. 640, 649 (1981) (uncontrolled discretion may suppress a particular point of view). See Pan Am. v. Municipality of San Juan, Puerto Rico, 2018 WL 6503215, at *9 (D.P.R. Dec. 10, 2018) (reviewing cases).

²⁸³ Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147, 151 (1969). As the Court also stated in City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publ’g Co., 486 U.S. 750, 763, (1988), without standards controlling the exercise of discretion, government officials may determine “who may speak and who may not based upon the content of the speech or viewpoint of the speaker.”

challenges under the First Amendment the existence of some subjective criteria does not make them invalid.”²⁸⁴

A sign ordinance that does not contain any standards for decision-making is an invalid prior restraint,²⁸⁵ as is an ordinance that does not have adequate standards for permits.²⁸⁶ Conversely, a sign ordinance that contains objective and precise standards for decision-making, such as size, height, location, area, and setback standards is not a prior restraint. Exceptions,²⁸⁷ enforcement provisions,²⁸⁸ and permit requirements²⁸⁹ are examples.

²⁸⁴ Thomas, 534 U.S. at 324–25.

²⁸⁵ Café Erotica of Fla., Inc. v. St. Johns County, 360 F.3d 1274 (11th Cir. 2004) (billboards; permits to be reviewed by County Administrator “in accordance with Standard Building Code”, but no specific grounds for denial in Code); Nat’l Experiential, LLC v. City of Chicago, 2024 WL 3757066, at *22 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 9, 2024) (“[t]he Zoning Administrator is authorized to issue temporary sign permits for special event signs and to impose time limits and other restrictions on the use, location, dimensions and characteristics of such signs to ensure that they are consistent with the purposes of this chapter.”); Morris v. City of New Orleans, 350 F. Supp. 3d 544, 560 (E.D. La. 2018) (“permitting-scheme vests City officials with discretion to grant or deny a permit based on their own ideas of what type of content ‘enhances the quality or character of the surrounding community’”); Citizens for Free Speech, LLC v. County of Alameda, 62 F. Supp. 3d 1129, 1141 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (signs to be placed on or attached to bus stop benches or transit shelters); Withers v. Vill. of Airmont, 2010 WL 11712641, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 30, 2010) (holding “[a]n ordinance regulating signs can be struck down as unconstitutional if it does not provide any standards to guide local officials in their decision to grant or deny sign permits”); Lamar Co., L.L.C. v. City of Marietta, 538 F. Supp. 2d 1366 (N.D. Ga. 2008) (unguided discretion to grant, deny or waive a permit); Covenant Media of Illinois, L.L.C. v. City of Des Plaines, Ill., 391 F. Supp. 2d 682, 693 (N.D. Ill. 2005) (no criteria for approving billboard permit); Lamar Adver. Co. v. City of Douglasville, 254 F. Supp. 2d 1321 (N.D. Ga. 2003) (no precise and objective standards for temporary sign permits); King Enters. v. Thomas Twp., 215 F. Supp. 2d 89, 1915 (E.D. Mich. 2002) (sign permit; no time limits or procedures for judicial review); Knoeffler v. Town of Mamakating, 87 F. Supp. 2d 322, 327 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (temporary permits for signs in the public interest); Pica v. Sarno, 907 F. Supp. 795 (D.N.J. 1995) (zoning variance, no standards provided).

²⁸⁶ Selah All. for Equal. v. City of Selah, 2021 WL 5286582, at *6 (E.D. Wash. June 30, 2021) (building official was under no mandate to (1) grant permit applications, (2) issue a decision, (3) process permit applications in a timely manner, or (4) explain why a permit was denied).

²⁸⁷ Lamar Tennessee, LLC v. City of Knoxville, 2016 WL 746503, at *17 (Tenn. Ct. App. Feb. 25, 2016) (specific criteria and guidelines guided decisions on whether to make exceptions to ordinance).

²⁸⁸ ArchitectureArt, LLC v. City of San Diego, 231 F. Supp.3d 828, 841 (S.D. Cal. 2017) (city employees had “narrow, objective and definite” standards to enforce ordinance).

²⁸⁹ Baldwin Park Free Speech Coal. v. City of Baldwin Park, 843 F. App’x 21, 22 (9th Cir. 2021) (discretion not overly broad; temporary permit “shall be granted when the City Planner finds the proposed sign to be in conformance with all applicable provisions of th[e] chapter, the Sign Design Guidelines and other applicable regulations;” standards and requirements clearly delineated; ability to “apply conditions of approval to ensure compliance” did not confer unbridled discretion since these conditions were imposed “only to achieve [the] specified purpose []” of compliance); H.D.V. - Greektown, LLC v. City of Detroit, 568 F.3d 609 (6th Cir. 2009) (very particular requirements for sign permits, including limitations on size, height, location, area, and setback conditions); Granite State Outdoor Adver., Inc. v. City of Clearwater, 351 F.3d 1112 (11th Cir. 2003) (objective criteria for permits such as height, size, or surface area of a proposed sign); Granite State Outdoor Adver., Inc. v. City of St. Petersburg, 348 F.3d 1278 (11th Cir. 2003)

Standards that are not as precise present more difficult prior restraint problems. Variances are an example. State zoning statutes authorize variances for “unnecessary hardship” or “practical difficulties.”²⁹⁰ State courts hold that these standards are not a delegation of power,²⁹¹ and some courts have found these standards precise enough to avoid prior restraint problems. A court of appeals, for example, upheld a variance provision that contained typical “practical difficulty” and “unnecessary hardship” standards.²⁹² The ordinance also required the city to consider whether a denial “would deprive the applicant of privileges enjoyed by owners of similarly zoned property,” whether a variance would constitute a “grant of special privilege,” and whether a variance would allow the applicant to engage in conduct otherwise forbidden by the city. Other courts upheld similar variance standards.²⁹³

(billboard permits; only on lot zoned commercial/industrial; only if no other structures are there; only one off-premises sign per lot; height, area, separation, and setback requirements); B & B Coastal Enters. v. Demers, 276 F. Supp. 2d 155 (D. Me. 2003) (sign must be within the maximum number of signs permitted for each zoning district, must meet square footage, height, and setback requirements, must not be located on the roof of a building; must meet restrictions on illuminated signs, must meet definite, objective standards for a temporary permit; maximum square footage requirement and time limit for portable and banner signs; signs prohibited “which prevent safe vehicular or pedestrian passage along public rights-of-way or sidewalks”); Township of Pennsauken v. Schad, 733 A.2d 1159 (N.J. 1999) (number, size, location and placement). See also Thomas v. Chicago Park Dist., 534 U.S. 316 (2002) (approving objective standards for park permit).

²⁹⁰ Variances are authorized by the Standard State Zoning Enabling Act, which authorizes “hardship variances” not “contrary to the public interest.” U.S. Dep’t of Commerce, A Standard State Zoning Enabling Act § 7(3) (1926), <https://tinyurl.com/standact>. A hardship variance can be granted for a change in use, although several states prohibit use variances. A “practical difficulties” variance can be granted for dimensional requirements, such as height and setback requirements. Daniel R. Mandelker & Michael Allen Wolf, Land Use Law § 6.39 (6th ed. LexisNexis Matthew Bender, 2015, updated annually). Sign variances can disrupt the administration of a sign ordinance and are not recommended. If authority for variances is included, the variance provision should be restrictive. The Street Graphics model ordinance authorizes sign variances only from height and setback requirements, and states that the variance may vary not more than 25 percent from code requirements. Street Graphics, § 1.15, at 91. Use variances are not authorized.

²⁹¹ Id., § 6.03; Daniel R. Mandelker, Delegation of Power and Function in Zoning Administration, 1963 Wash. U.L.Q. 60.

²⁹² Desert Outdoor Adver., Inc. v. City of Oakland, 506 F.3d 798 (9th Cir. 2007).

²⁹³ Rzadkowolski v. Metamora Twp., 2016 WL 3230535, at *3 (E.D. Mich. June 13, 2016) (uniqueness, would deprive of rights enjoyed by others, whether self-created, “practical difficulty on the subject site” defined); Citizens for Free Speech, LLC v. County of Alameda, 62 F. Supp. 3d 1129, 1141 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (area variance; “a parcel’s ‘size, shape, topography, location or surroundings’ deprive the property of privileges enjoyed by nearby parcels in the same zoning classification”); Int’l Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Harper Woods, 2016 WL 1682799, at *5 (Mich. Ct. App. Apr. 26, 2016) (be in harmony with the general purpose and intent of the sign ordinance, not be injurious to immediate neighborhood or adjacent land use, sufficiently compatible with architectural and design character of immediate neighborhood, and not be hazardous to passing traffic or otherwise detrimental to public safety and welfare); Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Portland, 262 P.3d 782 (Or. Ct. App. 2011) (objective, physical aspects of sign and extent to which sign would significantly increase street level sign clutter, adversely dominate visual image of an area, be inconsistent with plan or design district objectives, create traffic or safety hazards, be of exceptional design or style

Other courts invalidated standards typically available for zoning variances.²⁹⁴ Some ordinances use “general welfare” or similar vague standards as the basis for granting zoning variances, and courts have held them unconstitutional as a prior restraint.²⁹⁵ In a case where a district court had not considered a claim of unbridled discretion in the standards for a variance, it was required on remand consider this argument because the constitutionality of the variance provision affected the constitutionality of the entire ordinance.²⁹⁶

Historic district preservation ordinances present prior restraint problems. They typically require a “certificate of appropriateness” from the Historic District Commission for the modification of the exterior of a historic building or a new development in a historic district if they are compatible with the historic character of the district. A certificate may also be required for a sign, or a modification of a sign.²⁹⁷

This standard raises a prior restraint problem. It may not be an issue because a historic district’s historic character provides an acceptable reference point for the compatibility standard. A court of appeals, for example, upheld an ordinance that required the review of sign permit so as to enhance an area or be a visible landmark, and be more consistent with site architecture and development). See also GEFT Outdoor, LLC v. City of Evansville, Indiana, 110 F.4th 935, 937 (7th Cir. 2024) (“functionally identical criteria for variances from another jurisdiction’s sign ordinance do not violate the First Amendment as too vague”); GEFT Outdoor, LLC v. Monroe Cnty., 62 F.4th 321, 328 (7th Cir. 2023) (upholding variance provision because county removed all content-based sign regulations, county permitted ample alternatives for speech, Board’s discretion was not central to the overarching zoning scheme, and federalism issues should deter a federal court from stepping “into states’ and municipalities’ traditional sphere of land-use regulation and facially invalidate zoning laws left and right.”

²⁹⁴ Int’l Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Troy, Michigan, 974 F.3d 690, 698 (6th Cir. 2020) (multiple vague and undefined criteria, such as “public interest,” “general purpose and intent of this Chapter,” “adversely affect[ing],” “hardship,” and “practical difficulty”); Bill Salter Advert., Inc. v. Baldwin Cty., Alabama, 2009 WL 10704418, at *4 (S.D. Ala. Mar. 13, 2009) (“standards” not objective, contain discretionary terms such as “exceptional narrowness,” “exceptional topographic conditions,” and “an adequate supply of light,” Board to determine if applicant is attempting to assert an entitlement to a variance for legitimate reasons or for “convenience” or “economic loss;” ordinance provided that variance “may” be granted).

²⁹⁵ GEFT Outdoor, L.L.C. v. Monroe Cnty., 2021 WL 5494483, at *12 (S.D. Ind. Nov. 23, 2021) (“injurious to the public health, safety, and general welfare”; whether the surrounding property would be “affected in a substantially adverse manner”; whether a denial of a variance would cause “unnecessary hardship”; and whether a variance would “interfere substantially with the Comprehensive Plan”); Nittany Outdoor Advert., LLC v. College Twp., 22 F. Supp. 3d 392, 416 (M.D. Pa. 2014) (“detrimental to the public welfare”); City of Indio v. Arroyo, 191 Cal. Rptr. 565 (Cal. App. 1983) (“will not be injurious to public welfare” and “shall be in harmony with the general purpose and intent of the [sign] ordinance and general plan”).

²⁹⁶ Geft Outdoor, LLC v. City of Westfield, 39 F.4th 821 (7th Cir. 2022).

²⁹⁷ Carol M. Rose, Preservation and Community: New Directions in the Law of Historic Preservation, 33 Stan. L. Rev. 473 (1981), identifies three stages in the development of historic preservation programs.

applications “for conformity in exterior material composition, exterior structural design, external appearance and size of similar advertising or information media used in the architectural period of the district in accordance with the Resource Inventory of building architectural styles of the Bradford Historic District.” The presence of individuals knowledgeable about historic preservation on the review board also guarded against arbitrary decision-making.²⁹⁸ A district court, however, reached a contrary conclusion in a sign permit case and held a similar but less complete set of standards invalid.²⁹⁹

More difficult prior restraint problems created by decision-making procedures occur in sign ordinances that apply outside historic districts but contain similar compatibility standards. Sign ordinances that authorize conditional uses are an example.³⁰⁰ The cases that considered these ordinances are difficult to classify because ordinances vary, but some courts held them invalid when standards were stated in general terms without additional detail. In Desert Outdoor Advertising v. City of Moreno Valley,³⁰¹ for example, all off-site signs required a conditional use permit. The ordinance authorized a permit if “such a display will not have a harmful effect upon the health or welfare of the general public and will not be detrimental to the welfare of the general public and will not be detrimental to the aesthetic quality of the community or the surrounding land uses.” The Ninth Circuit held the ordinance was a prior restraint because it conferred unbridled discretion since it placed “no limits” on the decision to deny a permit. Though courts in ²⁹⁸ Riel v. City of Bradford, 485 F.3d 736, 755 (3d Cir. 2007). See also Lusk v. Village of Cold Spring, 475 F.3d 480 (2d Cir. 2007) (“alteration of designated property shall be compatible with its historic character, and with exterior features of neighboring properties;” in applying compatibility principle Review Board to consider “(a) The general design, character and appropriateness to the property of the proposed alteration or new construction; (b) The scale of proposed alteration or new construction in relation to the property itself, surrounding properties, and the neighborhood; (c) Texture and materials, and their relation to similar features of the properties in the neighborhood; (d) Visual compatibility with surrounding properties, including proportion of the property’s front facade, proportion and arrangement of windows and other openings within the facade and roof shape; and (e) The importance of architectural or other features to the historic significance of the property”); Lamar Tennessee, LLC v. City of Knoxville, 2016 WL 746503, at *1 (Tenn. Ct. App. Feb. 25, 2016) (historic district standards clearly set forth).

²⁹⁹ Lamar Adver. Co. v. City of Douglasville, 254 F. Supp. 2d 1321 (N.D. Ga. 2003) (“effect on the aesthetic, historic, or architectural significance and the value of the historic property,” as well as “any design review guidelines which may be developed by the commission”).

³⁰⁰ Citizens for Free Speech, LLC v. Cty. of Alameda, 114 F. Supp. 3d 952, 962 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (holding invalid sign ordinance that allowed officials to decide whether proposed use “materially change[s] the provisions of the approved land use and development plan” for the property, which determines whether a conditional use is necessary).

³⁰¹ 103 F.3d 814 (9th Cir. 1996).

cases not involving free speech issues have upheld similar standards,³⁰² the Moreno case indicates that generally stated standards of this type are an invalid prior restraint under the free speech clause. Cases in accord with Moreno Valley are cited in the footnote.³⁰³

The Fourth Circuit, however, upheld a similar compatibility standard for exemptions from a sign ordinance,³⁰⁴ and courts upheld similar standards when an ordinance provided more detailed direction and content. In G.K. Ltd. Travel v. City of Lake Oswego,³⁰⁵ for example, the Ninth ³⁰² Land Use Law, supra note 287, at § 6.03.

³⁰³ GEFT Outdoor, L.L.C. v. Monroe Cnty., 2021 WL 5494483, at *11 (S.D. Ind. Nov. 23, 2021) (applicable standards required findings, among others, that the proposed use be “harmonious with and in accordance with the general objectives of the City’s Comprehensive Plan,” “harmonious and appropriate in appearance,” and not be “disturbing to existing or future neighboring uses”); Conteers LLC v. City of Akron, 2020 WL 5529656, at *11 (N.D. Ohio Sept. 15, 2020) (conditional use must “be harmonious with and in accordance with the general objectives of the City’s Comprehensive Plan,” and “be designed, constructed, operated, and maintained so as to be harmonious and appropriate in appearance with the existing or intended character of the general vicinity and will not change the essential character of the same area,” and “not be hazardous or disturbing to existing or future neighboring uses;” and “not result in the destruction, loss, or damage of a natural, scenic, or historic feature of major importance”); Outdoor Sys. v. City of Merriam, 67 F. Supp. 2d 1258 (D. Kan. 1999) (requirement that “all signs shall conform, generally, to the aesthetics of the immediate area in which they are placed”); CBS Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Royal Oak, 2012 WL 3759306, at *6 (E.D. Mich. Aug. 29, 2012) (billboard; special land use provision; standards included compliance with master plan, harmonious in appearance with general vicinity, not disturbing to existing and reasonably anticipated uses, will be served adequately by essential public services, and similar standards); Macdonald Advertising Co. v. City of Pontiac, 916 F. Supp. 644 (E.D. Mich. 1995) (billboard, standards applied to all special exceptions: that the proposed development will not unreasonably injure the surrounding neighborhood or adversely affect the development of the surrounding neighborhood, and that any proposed building shall not be out of harmony with the predominant type of building in the particular district by reason of its size, character, location, or intended use); City of Indio v. Arroyo, 191 Cal. Rptr. 565 (Cal. App. 1983) (sign’s relationship to overall appearance of subject property as well as surrounding community; compatible design, simplicity and sign effectiveness). See, generally, Land Use Law, supra note 287, at §§ 6.50-6.56, ³⁰⁴ Wag More Dogs, LLC v. Cozart, 680 F.3d 359 (4th Cir. 2012) (board may grant exemption if it finds that the ordinance will not “(1) affect adversely the health or safety of persons residing or working in the neighborhood of the proposed use; (2) be detrimental to the public welfare or injurious to property or improvements in the neighborhood; [or] (3) be in conflict with the purposes of the master plans of the County.”) The court held that the “normally amorphous” general welfare standard was not a problem because it was modified by the language after the “or” in clause (2).

³⁰⁵ 436 F.3d 1064, 1082 (9th Cir. 2006). See also accord Outdoor Media Group, Inc. v. City of Beaumont, 506 F.3d 895 (9th Cir. 2007) (can approve application within 15 days if in conformance with chapter and consistent with its intent and purpose, which included encouraging a desirable urban character with minimum of overhead clutter; enhancing the economic value of the community and each area thereof through the regulation of the size, number, location, design and illumination of signs; and encouraging signs that are compatible with on-site and adjacent land uses; signs must also be compatible with the style and character of existing improvements upon lots adjacent to the site, including incorporating specific visual elements such as type of construction materials, color, or other design detail); Citizens for Free Speech, LLC v. Cty. of Alameda, 114 F. Supp. 3d 952, 964 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (required by the public need; properly related to other land uses and transportation and service facilities in the vicinity; materially affect adversely the health or safety of persons residing or working in the vicinity, or materially detrimental to the public welfare or injurious to property or improvements in the neighborhood; and will be contrary to the specific intent clauses or performance standards established for the district, in which it is to be located); Lamar Corp. v. City of Twin Falls, 981 P.2d 1146 (Idaho 1999) (distinguishing Moreno; standards provided that location and placement of sign

Circuit upheld standards for a sign permit that required signs to be “compatible with other nearby signs, other elements of street and site furniture and with adjacent structures.” Guidelines for making the compatibility decision stated that “[c]ompatibility shall be determined by the relationships of the elements of form, proportion, scale, color, materials, surface treatment, overall sign size and the size and style of lettering.” The ordinance, the court held, provided a “limited and objective set of criteria” more specific than the standard it held invalid in Moreno. A requirement that reasons must be stated for approvals or denials, a fourteen-day processing period for decisions, and the availability of an appeal to the city council also supported the constitutionality of the ordinance.³⁰⁶

A sign ordinance may include architectural design standards that apply directly or that may be applied in a design review process. Design standards can raise prior restraint problems if they are not sufficiently precise. Thematic design standards can be constitutional. A district court case upheld an ordinance for a tourist destination city in Washington State that adopted a Bavarian theme for its commercial districts.³⁰⁷ The theme prohibited any sign in the commercial districts that was “not compatible in design, lettering style, and color with the Old World Bavarian-Alpine theme.” A Design Review Board (DRB) was authorized to review applications for sign permits to decide whether a sign complied with the policies and design guidelines that applied, with a primary focus on the Bavarian Theme. Although the criteria for compliance with the Bavarian theme were elastic and required the exercise of reasonable discretion by the DRB, the court held that the lack will not endanger motorists; that sign will not cover or blanket prominent view of structure or facade of historical or architectural significance; that sign will not obstruct views of users of adjacent buildings to side yards, front yards, or to open space; that sign will not negatively impact visual quality of a public open space; that sign is compatible with building heights of existing neighborhood and does not impose a foreign or inharmonious element to an existing skyline; and that sign’s lighting will not cause hazardous or unsafe driving conditions for motorists). But see CBS Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Kentwood, 2010 WL 3942842, at *2 (W.D. Mich. Oct. 6, 2010) (holding standards invalid for special land use applications providing that whether request “preserves the health, safety, and welfare of the public, and is in harmony with the general purpose and intent of this ordinance;” whether request “may have a substantial and permanent adverse effect on neighboring property;” whether request “is generally aesthetically compatible with its surroundings;” proposed special use must “[b]e designed, constructed, operated and maintained so as to be harmonious and appropriate in appearance, with the existing or intended character of the general vicinity;” and “The construction or maintenance of a billboard may not act as a detriment to adjoining property, act as an undue distraction to traffic on nearby streets, or detract from the aesthetics of the surrounding area”).

³⁰⁶ An ordinance is valid even though it provides that the decision making body “may” rather than “must” give approval if a proposal meets the standards in the ordinance. Thomas, 534 U.S. at 324-325. See also Wag More Dogs, LLC v. Cozart, 680 F.3d 359, 362 (4th Cir. 2012).

³⁰⁷ Demarest v. City of Leavenworth, 876 F. Supp.2d 1186 (E.D. Wash. 2012).

of rigid definitions did not make the sign code an unconstitutional prior restraint. The sign-permitting process reflected the city's overall legitimate interest in aesthetics, DRB members were knowledgeable about the theme, the city created a portfolio of photos to assist permit applicants, and the code contained multiple procedural safeguards. Any person could request administrative interpretation or seek administrative and judicial review of DRB decisions.

The Model Ordinance in Street Graphics and the Law provides design standards for a design review process for Programs for Graphics, "a written and visual statement that provides for the creative design of street graphics."³⁰⁸ A reviewing board or commission must consider design and architectural quality when reviewing a Program for Graphics for approval,³⁰⁹ and the Model Ordinance includes criteria to consider "[w]hen deciding whether a Program for Graphics meets the design criteria." The GK case suggests that courts will uphold design review standards like these because they are sufficiently detailed and precise.

³⁰⁸ Street Graphics § 1.12, supra note 3, at 88.

³⁰⁹ The criteria include compatibility standards and also state that a sign must "[b]e of unique design, and exhibit a high degree of thoughtfulness, imagination, inventiveness, and spirit." Id.

CHAPTER III: THE FEDERAL HIGHWAY BEAUTIFICATION ACT

§ 3:1. The Federal Highway Beautification Act

The federal Highway Beautification Act requires the adoption of state legislation³¹⁰ that prohibits billboards with exemptions that distinguish between on-premises and off-premises signs similar to the distinction upheld in City of Austin v. Reagan National Advertising of Austin.³¹¹ States that do not comply with the federal statute can lose a share of their federal highway funds, but the federal agency seldom exercises this authority.

The federal billboard ban requires states to prohibit billboards in urban areas within 660 feet of the right-of-way of federal interstate and primary highways.³¹² In rural areas, state laws must prohibit visibility from the highway. The law authorizes an exemption for the display of billboards in commercial and industrial areas under agreements between the states and the federal Secretary of Transportation. The federal statute contemplated the removal of nonconforming billboards, but this program failed because necessary federal funding was not appropriated. Some state statutes allow more restrictive local regulation of billboards,³¹³ and some courts have held that a state statute does not preempt stricter local regulations.³¹⁴ The statutes usually require permits³¹⁵ that must contain adequate procedural and substantive requirements to avoid being a prior restraint.³¹⁶

³¹⁰ For an overview of a typical state statute, see Outdoor Media Dimensions, Inc. v. Dep't of Transp., 132 P.3d 5, 8-9 (Or. 2006).

³¹¹ 596 U.S. 61 (2022); § 2:4[4].

³¹² 23 U.S.C. § 131(c) (defining the “effective control” that must be included in state legislation and listing signs that can be displayed). See Craig J. Albert, Your Ad Goes Here: How the Highway Beautification Act of 1965 Thwarts Highway Beautification, 48 U. Kan. L. Rev. 463 (2000).

³¹³ C.C. Dillon Co. v. City of Eureka, 12 S.W.3d 322 (Mo. 2000) (upholding law)

³¹⁴ Lamar OCI S. Corp. v. Stanly Cty. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, 650 S.E.2d 37 (N.C. App.2007), aff'd & appeal held improvidently allowed, 669 S.E.2d 322 (N.C. 2008).

³¹⁵ StreetMediaGroup, LLC v. Stockinger, 2021 WL 5770231, at *4 (D. Colo. Dec. 6, 2021) (upholding statute as not content-based when it contains permit requirement that requires permits for signs erected in exchange for compensation without reference to the content of the signs; held narrowly tailored and leaving open ample alternative channels for communication).

³¹⁶ Id., holding that statute did not have permit approval criteria, but agency rules delineated nine reasons for which the agency must deny an advertising permit and five reasons for which they may. These reasons are “narrow, objective, and definite standards” that properly guide the permitting authority. See §5:8 (discussing prior restraint).

The federal law requires state statutes to exempt

“(2) signs, displays, and devices advertising the sale or lease of property upon which they are located, [and] (3) signs, displays, and devices including those which may be changed at reasonable intervals by electronic process or by remote control, advertising activities conducted on the property on which they are located.”³¹⁷

This exemption creates a distinction between on-premises and off-premises signs because it allows on-premises signs to display activities on the premises but not billboards that are prohibited adjacent to highways. The Supreme Court in Reagan held this distinction constitutional because it used the exemption in the Highway Beautification Act to show that the exemption was a longstanding practice. It explained that “[o]n-/off-premises distinctions . . . proliferated following the enactment of the Highway Beautification Act of 1965,” and that “[u]nder the Act, approximately two-thirds of States have implemented similar on-/off-premises distinctions.”³¹⁸

The cases were divided pre-Reed on whether these statutory exemptions were valid. Early state cases accepted the different treatment of off-premises and on-premises signs in the state highway beautification statutes, accepted limited exemptions allowed under state law, and accepted state laws allowing commercial and noncommercial messages on-premises.³¹⁹ Courts post-Reed held that exemptions like these in state highway beautification were content-based³²⁰

³¹⁷ 23 U.S.C. § 131(c). For the regulations implementing this section see 23 C.F.R. § 750.105(a). See also § 750.110 (states may prohibit permitted signs).

³¹⁸ Reagan, 596 U.S. at 65.

³¹⁹ Wheeler v. Commissioner of Highways, 822 F.2d 586 (6th Cir. 1987) (state highway beautification statute content-neutral because it permitted commercial and non-commercial signs in protected areas if signs relate to activity on the premises); Pigg v. State Dep't of Highways, 746 P.2d 961 (Colo. 1987) (upholding state statute exempting tourist-related signs to avoid substantial economic hardship, and upholding state regulation construing on-premises signs to include ideological signs); State by Spannaus v. Hopf, 323 N.W.2d 746 (Minn. 1982) (holding distinction between on-premises and off-premises signs not content-based and recognizing unique nature of the business sign).

³²⁰ Thomas v. Bright, 937 F.3d 721, 729 (6th Cir. 2019) (holding Act is underinclusive and not narrowly tailored); Auspro Enterprises, LP v. Texas Dep't of Transp., 506 S.W.3d 688, 701 (Tex. App. 2016) (same; invalidating several exemptions in Texas law for signs relating to a public election, a natural wonder or scenic or historic attraction, the sale or lease of property, and activities conducted on the property on which it is located; rest of act severable); Outdoor Media Dimensions, Inc. v. Dep't of Transp., 132 P.3d 5, 18 (Or. 2006) (same). See L.D. Mgmt. Co. v. Gray, 988 F.3d 836 (6th Cir. 2021) (regulations held content-based restrictions on speech because act differentiated between billboards advertising off-site activities and those advertising on-site activities). See also Adams Outdoor Advert. Ltd. P'ship v. Pennsylvania Dep't of Transportation, 930 F.3d 199 (3rd Cir. 2019) (invalidating exemption for on-premises signs for signs advertising sale or lease of property; applying different Third Circuit rules). See Emily Jessup, When "Free Coffee" Violates the First Amendment: The Federal Highway Beautification Act After Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 16 First Amend. L. Rev. 73 (2017).

and rejected aesthetics and traffic safety as compelling interests.³²¹ The Supreme Court’s decision in Reagan overruled these cases. The exemption of government signs under a state statute has also been upheld, and the court held that the statute left open ample alternative channels of communication.³²² States may adopt a definition of “outdoor advertising” that does not use the off-premises v. on-premises distinction, such as by defining “outdoor advertising” as a sign for which compensation is paid.³²³

The federal law also authorizes agreements between the states and the federal agency that control the size, lighting, and spacing of signs in zoned and unzoned commercial and industrial areas within six hundred and sixty feet of the nearest edge of a right-of-way.³²⁴ In AMG, LLC v. Georgia Dep't of Transportation,³²⁵ the court held the department’s denial of a permit for a multiple message sign because it violated the statutory spacing requirement was content neutral because it was based on the content-neutral spacing provision.

³²¹ L.D. Mgmt. Co. v. Gray, 988 F.3d 836, 839 (6th Cir. 2021); Thomas v. Bright, 937 F.3d 721, 733 (6th Cir. 2019).

³²² Bruce & Tanya & Assocs., Inc. v. Bd. of Supervisors of Fairfax Cnty., Virginia, 854 F. App'x 521, 526 (4th Cir. 2021)

³²³ StreetMediaGroup, LLC v. Stockinger, 79 F.4th 1243, 1250 (10th Cir. 2023) (state highway beautification act content neutral when it defined “outdoor advertising” such as billboards as a sign for which compensation was paid, an alternative to the off-premises vs. on-premises distinction).

³²⁴ 23 U.S.C. § 131(d).

³²⁵ 904 S.E.2d 10, 17 (Ga. Ct. App. 2024).

CHAPTER IV. SPECIALIZED ON-PREMISES SIGNS

§ 4:1. An Overview

This chapter discusses a wide variety of specialized on-premises signs, including digital signs, portable signs, time and temperature signs, and murals.³²⁶ Courts usually uphold regulations for these specialized signs.

§ 4.2. Digital Signs

A digital sign is any sign that uses electronic means within a display area to cause one display to be replaced by another. A digital sign is called an Electronic Messaging Center, or EMC.³²⁷ Digital signs require more restrictive regulation in sign ordinances. They create more traffic safety risks than static signs because they are brighter and change frequently.³²⁸ A municipality can prohibit digital signs entirely, allow them only in some zoning districts, regulate how they can be displayed, or adopt a combination of these measures. Courts usually uphold these ordinances.³²⁹

³²⁶ This chapter does not discuss roof signs. The Street Graphics Model Ordinance does not allow above roof signs. See Barber v. City of Anchorage, 776 P.2d 1035 (Alaska 1989) (upholding ordinance prohibiting above roof signs).

³²⁷ Street Graphics, supra note 3, at 57. The Street Graphics Model Ordinance defines “dynamic elements” for signs. Model Ordinance § 1.02 in id, at 72. See also Chapter 6. For discussion of illumination for digital signs see Daniel M. Isaacs & Michael A. Valenza, A Market Approach to Billboard Light, 46 Real Est. L.J. 6 (2017) (includes discussion of nuisance actions).

³²⁸ See Jerry Wachtel, Compendium of Recent Research Studies on Distraction from Commercial Electronic Variable Message Signs (2018), <https://www.scenic.org/wp-content/uploads/2019/09/billboard-safety-study-comp-endium-updated-february-2018.pdf> [<https://perma.cc/H5B5-5M3Z>], for a comprehensive review of studies concluding that outdoor advertising distracts driver attention. For additional studies that consider this problem see Oscar Oviedo-Trespalacios et al., The Impact of Road Advertising Signs on Driver Behaviour and Implications for Road Safety: A Critical Systematic Review, 122 Transp. Res. Part A: Policy and Practice 85 (2019), <https://tinyurl.com/drivebehav> (concluding most studies remain inconclusive, but finding that there is an emerging trend in the literature suggesting that roadside advertising can increase crash risk, particularly for digital billboards); John S. Decker et al., The Impact of Billboards on Driver Visual Behavior: A Systematic Literature Review, 16 Traffic Inj. Prev. 234 (2015), <https://tinyurl.com/systlit> (surveying various literature reviews finding that both electronic and passive billboards can create distractive effects); Tania Dukic et al., Effects of Electronic Billboards on Driver Distraction, 14 Traffic Inj. Prev. 469 (2013), <https://tinyurl.com/electbil> (finding digital billboards have more of an effect than static billboards but not clear whether they are a traffic hazard). see also Federal Highway Admin. Research Review of Potential Safety Effects of Electronic Billboards on Driver Attention and Distractions (2001), <https://tinyurl.com/potsaf> (digital billboards may be associated with a higher crash rate under certain conditions). See also Jerry Wachtel, Digital Billboards, Distracted Drivers, Planning, Mar. 2011, at 25–27.

³²⁹ The Federal Highway Administration published a Guidance for Off-Premise Changeable Message Signs for billboards covered by the Highway Beautification Act that the District of Columbia Court of Appeals held was final agency action not promulgated contrary to law. Scenic America, Inc. v. United States Dep't of Transp., 836 F.3d 42 (D.C. Cir. 2016).

A leading pre-Reed case, Naser Jewelers, Inc. v. City of Concord,³³⁰ decided on a motion for a preliminary injunction, held that an ordinance prohibiting the display of digital signs,³³¹ as applied to prohibit a digital sign at a retail store, was a time, place, and manner regulation.³³² It was content-neutral, advanced the city's stated goals of advancing traffic safety and community aesthetics, and was narrowly tailored because these interests could not be achieved as effectively without the prohibition.

The court quoted the holding in Metromedia that billboards are a traffic hazard, and held that "EMCs, which provide more visual stimuli than traditional signs, logically will be more distracting and more hazardous."³³³ The court applied the alternate channels of communication requirement generously. There was evidence the city considered and rejected alternatives and gave reasons for their rejection. Allowing EMCs with conditions, such as a limit on the number of times a message could change during a day would create steep monitoring costs and other complications.³³⁴ Ample alternate channels of communication were available because the retailer could use static and manually changeable signs, "place advertisements in newspapers and magazines and on television and the internet, distribute flyers, circulate direct mailings, and engage ³³⁰ 513 F.3d 27 (1st Cir. 2008).

³³¹ The ordinance prohibited all signs that "appear animated or projected," or "are intermittently or intensely illuminated, or of a traveling, tracing, scrolling, or sequential light type" or "contain or are illuminated by animated or flashing light." Id. at 31.

³³² See § 2:7[1].

³³³ 517 F.3d 35. The court adopted the view that studies were not necessary to show that the ban on EMCs supported the city's stated interests. Id.

³³⁴ The court quoted another decision, citing Vincent, which held that if the medium itself is the "evil the city [seeks] to address," then a ban of that medium is narrowly tailored. Id. at 36.

in cross-promotions with other retailers."³³⁵ Other cases upheld digital billboard bans pre-Reed under the Central Hudson criteria³³⁶ and post-City of Austin.³³⁷

Not all ordinances are total bans. A pre-Reed Sixth Circuit case upholding a 4000-foot spacing requirement for digital signs on billboards as a content-neutral time, place, and manner regulation explained the justification.³³⁸ The spacing requirement was not reasonably an attempt to censor a message, as it addressed how a billboard is built, not what it says. It was reasonable even though the township could have adopted a lesser limitation. Because of their increased visibility and changing display, the court held that digital billboards could have a greater effect on safety and aesthetics than static ones. Ample alternative channels for communication remained open. The courts have also upheld a moratorium on digital signs.³³⁹

³³⁵ Id. at 36, 37.

³³⁶ La Tour v. City of Fayetteville, 442 F.3d 1094, 1095 (8th Cir. 2006) (upholding ban on any sign that "flashes, blinks, or is animated" that was not enforced against time and temperature signs, as applied to prevent display of electronic sign in office window; ban on flashing and scrolling signs held content neutral; signs inconsistent with rural community aesthetic; ordinance later amended to allow signs that did not flash or scroll); Adirondack Adver., LLC v. City of Plattsburgh, 2013 WL 5463681, at *4 (N.D.N.Y. Sept. 30, 2013) (criteria met, studies not necessary); Chapin Furniture Outlet, Inc. v. Town of Chapin, 2006 WL 2711851 (D.S.C. Sept. 20, 2006) (holding criteria met); Carlson's Chrysler v. City of Concord, 938 A.2d 69 (N.H. 2007) (zoning ordinance prohibiting all outdoor electronic advertising signs displaying commercial speech; studies not necessary to show that prohibition met stated interests, prohibition was most effective way to eliminate problems with electronic signs).

³³⁷ Adams Outdoor Advertising Ltd. Partnership v. City of Madison, 56 F.4th 1111 (7th Cir. 2023) (upholding ordinance that banned billboards but allowed digital signs in a few locations subject to strict limits, and that Adams Outdoor had not "meaningfully argued" that the digital sign ban "flunks" intermediate scrutiny; prohibiting digital signs serves significant governmental interests in promoting traffic safety and preserving visual aesthetics); Adams Outdoor Advert. Ltd. P'ship v. Town of Mount Pleasant, 2023 WL 4491197, at *12 (D.S.C. July 12, 2023) (applying City of Austin to uphold ban on digital signs because "the regulation does not prohibit any sign based on its political or ideological message and instead draws regulatory lines only based on the form that the sign takes;" ordinance survived intermediate scrutiny as suitable time-place-manner restriction because courts uniformly find that digital-sign bans promote traffic safety and preserve visual aesthetics); Lamar Co., LLC v. Lexington-Fayette Urb. Cnty. Gov't, 677 F.Supp.3d 673, 691 (E.D. Ky. 2023) (ban on digital signs held valid content-neutral regulation of speech; aesthetics and traffic safety are substantial government interests, sufficient evidence provided, ordinance leaves alternative channels for communication open); Fairway Outdoor Advert., LLC v. City of High Point, 2022 WL 17975990, at *5 (M.D.N.C. Dec. 28, 2022) (upholding ban on digital signs).

³³⁸ Hucul Advert., LLC v. Charter Twp. of Gaines, 748 F.3d 273 (6th Cir. 2014).

³³⁹ Lamar OCI North Corp. v. City of Walker, 803 F. Supp. 2d 707 (W.D. Mich. 2011) (upholding moratorium on digital signs).

Courts have upheld other types of regulations for digital signs, such as ordinances that limit digital signs to some areas of the municipality,³⁴⁰ size restrictions,³⁴¹ requirements for location, types of sign, hours of operation,³⁴² and rules limiting existing nonconforming billboards to static signs, rather than allowing them to become electronic billboards.³⁴³ A Tennessee decision illustrates these cases. The court upheld as a content-neutral time, place, and manner regulation, an ordinance prohibiting EMCs but permitting them in commercial and industrial districts “as a wall sign, or an integrated part of the total sign surface of a free-standing business sign.”³⁴⁴ The ordinance also allowed EMCs approved in a historic overlay district or a downtown design overlay district, in zoning districts with approved design guidelines, as a changeable price sign, and as a nonconforming sign. The court held the ordinance met the time, place, and manner rules and the Central Hudson criteria.

Digital billboards can be displayed safely by measures such as limiting nighttime sign luminance, regulating dwell time, prohibiting message sequencing and video or animation displays, avoiding areas where distraction may occur, and requiring minimum standards of ³⁴⁰ Signs for Jesus v. Town of Pembroke, 977 F.3d 93, 105 (1st Cir. 2020) (upholding ordinance restricting electronic signs to a commercial district; ordinance narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest and not overinclusive or underinclusive); Signs for Jesus v. Town of Pembroke, 230 F. Supp. 3d 49, 60-62 (D.N.H. 2017) (intermediate scrutiny; exemption for limited areas abutting commercial district did not make ordinance underinclusive, ordinance advanced traffic safety interest and aesthetic interest of small town, studies not needed, ordinance narrowly tailored, alternate channels open); Lamar Tennessee, LLC v. City of Knoxville, 2016 WL 746503, at *15 (Tenn. Ct. App. Feb. 25, 2016) (upholding as content-neutral time place, and manner regulation an ordinance prohibiting digital signs but permitting them in commercial and industrial districts “as a wall sign, or an integrated part of the total sign surface of a free standing business sign, as approved in a historic overlay district or a downtown design overlay district, in zoning districts with approved design guidelines, as a changeable price sign, and as a nonconforming sign”; ordinance met Central Hudson criteria). Compare E&J Equities, LLC v. Board of Adjustment of the Twp. of Franklin, 146 A.3d 623, 652-644 (N.J. 2016) (township permitted static billboards in a single zoning district adjacent to heavily travelled interstate highway but prohibited digital billboards in same zone; record provided no explanation of qualitative differences between three static billboards and a single digital billboard in that area and belied assertion that no standards existed to address aesthetic and public safety concerns). See also Adirondack Advert., LLC v. City of Plattsburgh, N.Y., 2013 WL 5463681 (N.D.N.Y. Sept. 30, 2013) (upholding ordinance providing that digital signs cannot display messages about goods or services not sold and delivered or provided on the premises where sign is located but may display messages about public emergencies and public events).

³⁴¹ Adirondack Adver., LLC v. City of Plattsburgh, 2013 WL 5463681 (N.D.N.Y. 2013) (applying Central Hudson).

³⁴² Outfront Media, LLC v. City of Grand Rapids, 2022 WL 3329484, at *11 (Mich. Ct. App. Aug. 11, 2022).

³⁴³ Id.

³⁴⁴ Lamar Tennessee, LLC v. City of Knoxville, 2016 WL 746503 at *14 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2016) (Reed case not discussed)..

legibility and readability. A district court upheld a sign ordinance that allowed no more than forty percent of an on-premises sign to have digital components, regulated the frequency of message changes, and required a sign to go dark if it malfunctioned.³⁴⁵

§ 4:3. Flags

Flags are often regulated by sign ordinances. Free speech problems arise when a sign ordinance identifies the content that flags can display by allowing only certain types of flags, such as government flags, and prohibiting others. Most courts have struck down content-based regulations of flags.

The leading pre-Reed case is Dimmitt v. City of Clearwater,³⁴⁶ where the Eleventh Circuit held invalid an ordinance exempting government flags but requiring a permit for a flag displaying the Greenpeace logo or a union affiliation. The court held "[t]he deleterious effect of graphic communication upon visual aesthetics and traffic safety, substantiated here only by meager evidence in the record, is not a compelling state interest of the sort required to justify content-based regulation of noncommercial speech."³⁴⁷ Neither was the distinction between government and other types of flags narrowly drawn to serve these interests. Several courts followed Dimmitt pre-Reed and held content-based exemptions for a limited group of flags unconstitutional.³⁴⁸

³⁴⁵ Geft Outdoor LLC v. Consolidated City of Indianapolis, 2016 WL 2941329, at 13 (S.D. Ind. 2016)..

³⁴⁶ 985 F.2d 1565 (11th Cir. 1993).

³⁴⁷ Id. at 1570.

³⁴⁸ Midwest Media Prop., LLC v. Symmes Township, 503 F.3d 456 (6th Cir. 2007) (exemption for federal, state and local flags held content-based; aesthetics and public safety not compelling interests); Solantic, LLC v. City of Neptune Beach, 410 F.3d 1250 (11th Cir. 2005) (flags and insignia of any government, religious, charitable, fraternal, or other organization; decorative flags or bunting for a celebration, convention, or commemoration of significance to the entire community when authorized by the city council for a prescribed period of time; held content-based and did not advance state interests); National Advertising Co. v. Orange, 861 F.2d 246 (9th Cir. 1988) (flags of national or state government, or not more than three flags of nonprofit religious; charitable or fraternal organizations; selective prohibition of noncommercial speech based on content); Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. Town Bd., 352 F. Supp. 2d 297 (N.D.N.Y. 2005) (exemption of flags, pennants, and insignia of any nation or association of nations, or of any state, city or other political unit, or of any political, charitable, educational, philanthropic, civic, or professional organization, or for campaign, drive, movement or event, but not religious symbols; favors some noncommercial messages over others); XXL of Ohio, Inc. v. City of Broadview Heights, 341 F. Supp. 2d 765, 791 (N.D. Ohio 2004) (flag and emblem of official government body); Lamar Adver. Co. v. City of Douglasville, 254 F. Supp. 2d 1321 (N.D. Ga. 2003) (exemption in historic district for flags or banners of the United States or other political subdivisions); North Olmsted Chamber of Commerce v. City of North Olmsted, 86 F. Supp. 2d 755, 768 (N.D. Ohio 2000) (flags, emblems, and insignia of all governmental bodies; lack of narrow tailoring and myriad exceptions to favored speakers; safety and aesthetics rationales significantly undercut); Village of Schaumburg v. Jeep Eagle Sales Corp., 676 N.E.2d 200 (Ill. App. Ct. 1996) (exemption of official and corporate flags held unconstitutional content-based regulation of noncommercial speech). Contra, Infinity Outdoor Inc. v. City of New York, 165 F. Supp. 2d 403, 422 (E.D.N.Y. 2001) (allowing civic, philanthropic, educational and religious groups to display a "flag, pennant, or insignia" in any district

Central Radio Co. Inc. v. City of Norfolk,³⁴⁹ held a sign ordinance invalid post-Reed that exempted governmental or religious flags and emblems from an ordinance but applied it to private and secular flags and emblems. Relying on Reed, the court held this part of the sign code was a content-based restriction. Applying strict scrutiny, the court did not find a compelling government interest to justify the distinctions and held the restrictions were not narrowly tailored because, as in Reed, they were underinclusive.³⁵⁰ The courts are divided on whether an exemption from a permit requirement is content-based.³⁵¹

Courts uphold regulations for the display of flags that are not content-based. In a pre-Reed case, American Legion Post 7 v. City of Durham,³⁵² the city adopted a flexible size limit for flags, required their display on flagpoles, prohibited more than three flagpoles on a property and more than two flags on a flagpole, established a setback requirement for flagpoles, and made flags with commercial messages subject to separate provisions. The court held that these requirements were content-neutral, served a substantial aesthetic interest, and satisfied the tests for time, place, and manner regulations. They were narrowly tailored, and an exemption for flags or noncommercial entities would undermine the aesthetic interests the ordinance served. They also left adequate alternate channels for communication open because the ordinance had a relatively liberal set of size limits and provided a special use permit procedure for obtaining temporary and permanent waivers.³⁵³ A post-Reed case upheld an ordinance³⁵³ for residential districts that allowed flags to be without restriction).

³⁴⁹ 811 F.3d 625, 633 (4th Cir. 2016).

³⁵⁰ See also Int'l Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Troy, 2017 WL 2831702, at *1 (E.D. Mich. June 30, 2017) (exemptions for flags and other temporary signs held invalid).

³⁵¹ Compare National Adver. Co. v. City of Miami, 287 F. Supp. 2d 1349, 1375 (S.D. Fla. 2003) (exemption from permitting process not an exception to a general ban of noncommercial messages.), dismissed as moot, 402 F.3d 1329 (11th Cir. 2005), with Knoeffler v. Town of Mamakating, 87 F. Supp. 2d 322 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (holding ordinance exempting government flags and other signs from permit requirement unconstitutional as discrimination against noncommercial speech).

³⁵² 239 F.3d 601 (4th Cir. 2001) (ordinance limiting size of American flags that could be displayed did not violate the First Amendment; though burdening speech, the ordinance was content-neutral, advanced the government interest in aesthetics, served that interest, and left open other avenues of expression).

³⁵³ The court distinguished the Supreme Court's holding in the Ladue case on this issue. See § 2:8[2].

slightly larger and exempt from height and setback requirements.³⁵⁴

Flags can be displayed on poles, and a municipality may want to ban pole signs but exempt flags from the pole sign prohibition. This exemption may create a free speech problem. In Geft Outdoor, LLC v. City of Westfield,³⁵⁵ the city banned pole signs but exempted flags from the pole sign ban. The district court held the pole sign ban content-neutral, but that an exception for certain flag poles destroyed the narrow tailoring necessary to promote the city’s interests in community aesthetics and safety. The Seventh Circuit remanded this decision to the district court for intermediate scrutiny review, but doubted its holding because intermediate scrutiny is “not an overly demanding standard,” and “[a]ll the City must show is that its pole sign ban furthers its stated interests without burdening substantially more speech than necessary.” The Seventh Circuit had a “difficult time” seeing how the flag pole exception made the pole sign ban unconstitutional because the pole sign ban still furthered the city’s interest in reducing visual clutter.

§ 4:4. Pole Signs

A pole sign is a “[a] sign principally supported by one or more columns, poles, or braces placed in or upon the ground.”³⁵⁶ The height and size of pole signs require restriction and regulation because they can be aesthetically harmful and cause driver distraction. Sign ordinances typically place size and height limits on freestanding pole signs, and courts uphold these restrictions when they are not content-based.³⁵⁷

G.K. Ltd. Travel v. City of Lake Oswego,³⁵⁸ a pre-Reed case, applied accepted justifications to uphold a sign code that allowed pole signs only in general commercial zones “when necessary to provide vision clearance at driveways or intersections and when there is no

³⁵⁴ Shaw v. City of Bedford, 262 F. Supp.3d 754 (S.D. Ind. 2017).

³⁵⁵ 39 F.4th 821 (7th Cir. 2022).

³⁵⁶ Andrew D. Bertucci & Richard B. Crawford, Model On-Premises Sign Code § 7, at 19 (United States Sign Council Foundation, 2016), <https://tinyurl.com/onpremcod>. The Code specifies where to display these signs, and has size and height limits for them. Id. at 35, 37-39.

³⁵⁷ See § 5:5, discussing height and size limitations.

³⁵⁸ 436 F.3d 1064 (9th Cir. 2006). See also Rodriguez v. Solis, 2 Cal. Rptr.2d 50 (Cal. App. 1991) (applying Central Hudson tests to uphold denial of permit for freestanding sign for automobile dealers because it was oriented toward freeway; denial prevented visual blight and did not require reversal because of right to conduct and advertise business on-premises).

alternative, visible on-building or monument sign location.” Plaintiffs claimed the pole sign ban was an unconstitutional ban on a protected medium of speech because pole signs were “a unique form of communication.”

The court held that the sign code was an acceptable time, place, and manner regulation. It did not regulate content because it did not distinguish “favored speech from disfavored speech based on the ideas or views expressed.”³⁵⁹ It did not contain exceptions based on content. Preservation of the city's aesthetic quality and the protection of travel safety appropriately were the two most prominent justifications for the restriction. The code was narrowly tailored because the height of pole signs could be aesthetically harmful and distracting to travelers, and the pole sign restriction achieved the city’s significant interest in preventing these problems. “The Code permissibly and in a narrowly tailored way limits the prominence of plaintiffs' advertising sign by restricting its length and position.”³⁶⁰ Ample alternative channels of communication were available, as the sign code allowed many other types of signs and did not restrict other forms of communication.

The courts will hold the regulation of pole signs invalid if it contains content-based exemptions. In a pre-Reed case,³⁶¹ the ordinance exempted official public notices, flags, an emblem or insignia of an official government body, holiday decorations, street name signs, and "special signage" approved by the Architectural Review Board as "reasonable considering the intent and regulations" of the ordinance. The ordinance was not an acceptable time, place, and manner regulation because "[t]he connection between traffic safety and aesthetics and the selective proscription of certain content on pole signs is not obvious."³⁶² An exemption for flags may be acceptable.³⁶³

³⁵⁹ Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. v. F.C.C., 512 U.S. 622 (1994).

³⁶⁰ G.K. Ltd., 436 F.3d at 1074.

³⁶¹ XXL of Ohio, Inc. v. City of Broadview Heights, 341 F. Supp. 2d 765 (N.D. Ohio 2004). Accord North Olmsted Chamber of Commerce v. City of North Olmsted, 86 F. Supp. 2d 755, 774 (N.D. Ohio 2000) (ordinances had numerous content-based distinctions).

³⁶² XXL, 341 F. Supp.2d at 796. Applying strict scrutiny, the court also held the aesthetic and traffic safety interests were not compelling, and that the ordinance was really and substantially overbroad facially.

³⁶³ § 4:3.

§ 4:5. Murals

Murals are signs or graphics that are painted or placed on walls or other structures.³⁶⁴ They are protected as free speech by the First Amendment.³⁶⁵ Several cities have programs that allow murals and provide a review process for their display.³⁶⁶

If the definition of a “mural” is content-based the regulations adopted for murals will be subject to strict scrutiny, which is usually fatal. Ordinances sometimes define a mural as a “work of art,” and there is no clear decision on whether this definition is facially content-based.³⁶⁷ Content-neutral definitions are possible.³⁶⁸

Murals are either commercial or noncommercial. Deciding when a mural is commercial or noncommercial can be challenging. *Complete Angler, LLC v. City of Clearwater*³⁶⁹ held a mural noncommercial even though it related to the business that displayed it. The owner of a bait and tackle store had several fishes painted on most of an exterior building wall to bring attention to locally endangered game fish species. "Art work" was exempted from the ordinance unless it was displayed "in conjunction with" a commercial enterprise. The court held the painting was an art work. It was a local artist's impression of the "natural habitat and waterways" surrounding the shop and alerted viewers to threats posed to the fish species it displayed. Though the painting might occasionally inspire the purchase of bait and tackle from the shop, it was not commercial speech because it did more than propose commercial transactions.

³⁶⁴ See Brian J. Connolly, Reed, Rembrandt, and Wright: Free Speech Considerations in Zoning Regulation of Art and Architecture, Zoning and Planning Law Report Vol. 41, No. 11 (2018).

³⁶⁵ Complete Angler, LLC v. City of Clearwater, Fla., 607 F. Supp. 2d 1326, 1332 (M.D. Fla. 2009).

³⁶⁶ See Los Angeles Murals Program, <https://tinyurl.com/losmur>; Portland, Oregon mural ordinance, <https://tinyurl.com/portmu>; San Buenaventura, California mural design guidelines, <https://tinyurl.com/ventmu>. For a discussion of Murals pre-Reed see Christina Chloe Orlando, Art or Signage?: The Regulation of Outdoor Murals and the First Amendment, 35 Cardozo L. Rev. 867 (2013). See also the San Buenaventura murals packet, <https://tinyurl.com/sanpack>.

³⁶⁷ Neighborhood Enters. v. City of St. Louis, 644 F.3d 728 (8th Cir. 2011) (invalidating but not discussing exemptions for art work and other content-based exemptions); Complete Angler, LLC v. City of Clearwater, Fla., 607 F. Supp. 2d 1326, 1335 n.13 (M.D. Fla. 2009) (facial challenge not addressed). See also Eller Media Co. v. Mayor of Baltimore, 784 A.2d 614 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 2001) (large depiction on side of building of baseball player with icon of retailer erroneously approved as mural in earlier proceeding).

³⁶⁸ Mural: A sign that is not an integral part of the architecture or color scheme of the structure.

³⁶⁹ 607 F. Supp. 2d 1326 (M.D. Fla. 2009).

Other cases reached contrary results on similar facts. In an Ohio case,³⁷⁰ the city denied a business a permit to paint a mural on one side of its building depicting a mad scientist character. Under the usual tests for commercial speech, the mural was commercial because the owner intended it to attract attention to the business, a refilling station for a known racing fuel or additive. A permit requirement and color and size restrictions in the ordinance were neutral on their face, but many exceptions to these restrictions were content-based, unconstitutional, and not severable, which made the ordinance unenforceable.³⁷¹

A mural ordinance is facially unconstitutional if it allows noncommercial³⁷² but not commercial murals.³⁷³ It can also be unconstitutional as applied if it is applied to content-based speech in a discriminatory manner,³⁷⁴ or if it is applied to prohibit a noncommercial sign.³⁷⁵ A ³⁷⁰ City of Tipp City v. Dakin, 929 N.E.2d 484 (Ohio App. 2010).

³⁷¹ See also Catsiff v. McCarty, 274 P.3d 1063 (Wash. Ct. App. 2012). The owner of a toy store and gift shop named the Inland Octopus painted a wall sign depicting an octopus hiding behind a rainbow over the rear entrance of the store, and an octopus hiding behind several buildings with a rainbow above the buildings on the store front. He admitted he did this to convey it was a wonderful experience to come into his store and a wonderful place to buy toys. Because the purpose of the sign was economic, the court characterized it as commercial speech. It upheld size, height and design restrictions on the sign as content-neutral.

³⁷² In Burke v. City of Charleston, 893 F. Supp. 589 (D.S.C 1995), vacated and remanded for lack of standing, 139 F.3d 401 (4th Cir. 1998), the plaintiff challenged a ruling by the city that a mural on the side of a restaurant in an historic district had to be removed. It was a colorful cartoon of imaginary characters, including smiling mountains, flying creatures with impractically small wings, and tiny yellow bipeds. A small commercial sign in the middle of the mural occupied 1/25th of its area. The court held the mural was noncommercial, and that color, size and other restrictions affected only the format or manner in which the artwork was displayed. The ruling that the mural was not appropriate for the historic district was a valid application of content-neutral time, place and manner rules from the city's historic preservation ordinance, which controlled the location and manner of expression in a narrowly drawn geographic area.

³⁷³ Morris v. City of New Orleans, 399 F. Supp. 3d 624, 636 (E.D. La. 2019); Kersten v. City of Mandan, 389 F. Supp. 3d 640, 646 (D.N.D. 2019). See also Complete Angler, LLC v. City of Clearwater, 607 F. Supp. 2d 1326, 1333 (M.D. Fla. 2009) (refusing to issue permit for mural because it was commercial).

³⁷⁴ Complete Angler, LLC v. City of Clearwater, Fla., 607 F. Supp. 2d 1326, 1333 (M.D. Fla. 2009). The city's enforcement of the ordinance was content-based because it had to examine the content of the mural when it refused to apply an "art work" exemption in the ordinance. The city also condoned the display of other murals, and a city official admitted a different subject matter for the plaintiff's mural would be acceptable. The content-based enforcement of the code did not withstand strict scrutiny because aesthetic and traffic safety interests were not compelling, and the favorable treatment of certain messages was not narrowly tailored.

³⁷⁵ City of Indio v. Arroyo 191 Cal. Rptr. 565 (Cal. Ct. App. 1983). The owners of a convenience store had a mural painted on one of their outside walls to depict "aspects of our ethnic Mexican heritage." The city denied the mural a permit and a variance because it exceeded the size limit allowed by the ordinance, but the court held the denials invalid because the ordinance was overbroad as applied to noncommercial speech. "The stifling of artistic expression is a perverse result to claim as a victory for esthetics." Id. at 570.

district court case pre-Reed³⁷⁶ illustrates these problems. The court held content-based and unconstitutional an ordinance that allowed murals in commercial districts only if they did not contain a corporate service, product, or image, a restriction that prohibited a substantial amount of commercial speech. The ordinance did not pass strict scrutiny because safety and aesthetic interests were not compelling interests that justified it, and the court could not see how content that was allowed would advance these goals while content that was not allowed would not. Neither was the ordinance narrowly drawn to advance these interests. A mural containing a corporate logo was no more distracting than a mural containing a classic painting.

A post-Reed case reached the same conclusion. Relying on Reed, the Fourth Circuit held content-based a sign ordinance that exempted “works of art” that “in no way identified] or specifically relate[d] to a product or service,” but that applied to art that referenced a product or service.³⁷⁷

§ 4:6. Portable and Temporary Signs

§ 4:6[1]. In General

As one court described them, portable signs are “freestanding and not permanently anchored or secured to either a building or the ground. They include but are not limited to ‘A’ frame signs, commonly called sandwich signs, ‘T’ frame signs, or any other sign which by its description or nature may be, or is intended to be, moved from one location to another.”³⁷⁸ Portable signs often are unattractive, can distract drivers, and can cause a traffic safety problem if located close to streets or highways. Local governments prohibit them,³⁷⁹ restrict the times allowed for their display, and adopt height and size limitations.

Courts apply either the Central Hudson criteria³⁸⁰ or the time place and manner rules³⁸¹ to ³⁷⁶ North Olmsted Chamber of Commerce v. City of North Olmsted, 86 F. Supp. 2d 755 (N.D. Ohio 2000). Accord, See also Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. City of Portland, 262 P.3d 782 (Or. Ct. App. 2011) (distinction between painted wall signs and painted wall decorations held unconstitutionally content-based).

³⁷⁷ Central Radio Co. Inc. v. City of Norfolk, Va., 811 F.3d 625, 633 (4th Cir. 2016).

³⁷⁸ Marras v. City of Livonia 575 F. Supp. 2d 807, 816 (E.D. Mich. 2008).

³⁷⁹ See Street Graphics Model Ordinance, supra note 3, § 1.13, at 90 (prohibiting portable signs)

³⁸⁰ See section 2:6[2].

³⁸¹ See section 2:7[1].

portable sign regulations and uphold reasonable regulations,³⁸² although some courts have not found reasons for regulating portable signs.

§ 4:6[2]. Total Prohibition

The cases on total prohibitions are mixed because courts are not always convinced that a total ban on portable signs is justified. *Harnish v. Manatee County*³⁸³ is an early Eleventh Circuit case applying the Central Hudson criteria to uphold the governmental interest in prohibiting portable and temporary signs. The county did studies and held public hearings before adopting the ordinance.³⁸⁴ Other Eleventh Circuit cases upheld total prohibitions,³⁸⁵ but a later Eleventh Circuit case struck down a total ban on portable signs and distinguished earlier Eleventh Circuit cases as upholding bans that were more narrowly drawn.³⁸⁶

Several cases uphold bans on portable signs as a content-neutral time, place, and manner

³⁸² Baldwin Park Free Speech Coal. v. City of Baldwin Park, 843 F. App'x 21, 23 (9th Cir. 2021) (temporary sign ordinances held content-neutral and narrowly tailored, interests in traffic safety and aesthetics were significant and not diminished by permit-exemption and special sign rules; ordinance narrowly tailored; ample alternatives existed; requirement that an applicant submit a “drawing or photograph of the proposed temporary sign” to show “[h]eight, [w]idth and [l]anguage” upheld).

³⁸³ 783 F.2d 1535 (11th Cir. 1986)..

³⁸⁴ An early Eleventh Circuit case, Dills v. Cobb County, 593 F. Supp. 170 (N.D. Ga. 1984), aff'd, 755 F.2d 1473 (11th Cir. 1985), held that the “mere incantation of aesthetics as a proper state purpose” did not meet First Amendment requirements. It held that the county “must present some evidence that aesthetic interests are furthered by the statute, and that the statute is narrowly drawn to meet those interests.” The county only presented bold statements in affidavits without supporting facts. Dills, 593 F. Supp. at 174 n.5. The ordinance had a setback requirement that effectively prohibited portable signs. Accord Signs, Inc. of Florida v. Orange County, 592 F. Supp. 693, 696 (M.D. Fla. 1983). See also Ballen v. City of Redmond, 466 F.3d 736, 742 (9th Cir. 2006) (rejecting city employee statement not supported by objective facts; portable sign ban held invalid).

³⁸⁵ Messer v. City of Douglasville, 975 F.2d 1505, 1513 (11th Cir. 1992); Don's Porta Signs, Inc. v. City of Clearwater, 829 F.2d 1051, 1053 (11th Cir. 1987).

³⁸⁶ LaCroix v. Town of Fort Myers Beach, Fla., 38 F.4th 941, 950 (11th Cir. 2022). The court believed that the ordinance foreclosed an important medium of expression.

regulations.³⁸⁷ *Lindsay v. City of San Antonio*³⁸⁸ illustrates these cases. The Fifth Circuit upheld a ban on portable signs and that it would advance the city's aesthetic interest even though the trial court found the ban would only "imperceptibly" change the community's appearance because the number of portable signs was small. This finding was at odds with the principle that "[t]he elimination of all visual blight is not the constitutional prerequisite to an ordinance regulating a type of signage."³⁸⁹ Visual evidence on whether portable signs are aesthetically offensive was conflicting, but the city's aesthetic judgment, which the court had to respect, was owed deference.

The court relied on Metromedia and Taxpayers for Vincent to hold the ban on portable signs narrowly tailored because the city eliminated the exact source of evil it sought to remedy. Portable signs are not a uniquely valuable or important mode of communication, and plaintiffs' ability to communicate effectively was not threatened by ever-increasing restrictions on speech. Ample alternate means of communication were available.

A federal district court applied the Central Hudson criteria post-Reed to uphold an ordinance that prohibited "A" frame signs, which are temporary.³⁹⁰ The court held the prohibition substantially advanced the city's aesthetic and traffic safety interests, and that it did not have to produce studies to prove this point. "A" frame signs posed a special risk to the community, "A" frame signs did not present the same aesthetic or traffic problems as other types of signs, and the city could treat them differently. Exceptions from the prohibition did not invalidate it because they ³⁸⁷ Marras v. City of Livonia, 575 F. Supp. 2d 807, 816 (E.D. Mich. 2008) (upholding as content neutral time, place, and manner regulation); Bertke v. City of Dayton, 1992 WL 1258520 at *5 (S.D. Ohio Jan. 2, 1992) (holding ban content-neutral and narrowly tailored; permanent signs provided adequate alternate method of communication, especially since fifty percent of a business wall or ground sign could have changeable copy); Rigsby v. Huntsville, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1104, at *10 (N.D. Ala. 1988) (holding prohibition directly advanced governmental interest, reached no further than necessary, and allowed sufficient alternative modes of communication); Barber v. City of Anchorage, 776 P.2d 1035, 1036 (Alaska 1989) (holding ordinance content-neutral and advanced aesthetic interest; alternate means available, can have permanent unlighted sign). See accord Don's Porta Signs, Inc. v. City of Clearwater, 829 F.2d 1051, 1053 (11th Cir. 1987) (one portable sign allowed on a property subject to restrictions). See also, post-Reed, Lone Star Sec. & Video, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles, 827 F.3d 1192, 1198 (9th Cir. 2016) (holding ordinances prohibiting non-motorized billboards and advertising on motor vehicles content-neutral and narrowly tailored and alternate means of communication allowed); Morales v. City of S. Padre Island, 2011 WL 13182954, at *7 (S.D. Tex. June 17, 2011) (upholding ordinance allowing window signs but prohibiting portable signs).

³⁸⁸ 821 F.2d 1103 (5th Cir. 1987).

³⁸⁹ Id. at 1109, citing Vincent, 466 U.S. at 811. Accord, Morales v. City of S. Padre Island, 2011 WL 13182954, at *6 (S.D. Tex. June 17, 2011) (and holding ban no broader than necessary and exemptions not content-based).

³⁹⁰ Timilsina v. West Valley City, 121 F. Supp. 3d 1205, 1215 (D. Utah 2015) (holding Reed did not apply because ordinance regulated commercial speech).

did not undercut the city's stated goals.³⁹¹ An exception for the city center recognized its different visual quality and traffic plan. A second exception allowed "A" frame signs for only a short 30-day period after obtaining a business license. Neither did the prohibition burden substantially more speech than was necessary. It affected only a "sliver" of speech, and the affected business had effectively used other means of communication. The plaintiff did not suggest less burdensome alternatives.

Courts are hostile to other forms of portability. *Ballen v. City of Redmond*³⁹² struck down a portable sign ban the city applied to prohibit signs held by hand on weekdays on a sidewalk in front of a bagel store because it violated the fourth "more extensive than necessary" Central Hudson criterion. The ordinance exempted ten types of signs the court held content-based. Relying on the Supreme Court's Discovery Network decision,³⁹³ which struck down an ordinance that discriminated against commercial speech, the court held that "[t]he City has failed to show how the exempted signs reduce vehicular and pedestrian safety or besmirch community aesthetics any less than the prohibited signs."³⁹⁴ Courts have struck down prohibitions on similar unusual temporary signs for similar reasons.³⁹⁵

³⁹¹ They aligned more closely with the distinction between onsite and offsite advertising approved in Metromedia, the city may have believed "A" frame signs in the city center or the occasional grand opening sign presented more problems, and that the interest in commercial speech was more important in these instances. Id. at 1219.

³⁹² 466 F.3d 736 (9th Cir. 2006). Later cases distinguished Ballen. E.g., World Wide Rush, LLC v. City of Los Angeles, 606 F.3d 676, 686 (9th Cir. 2010) (government created distinction between permissible and prohibited forms of commercial speech that undermined government's asserted interests in regulation as a whole).

³⁹³ Discovery Network is discussed in § 2:6[6].

³⁹⁴ Id. at 743. The court also held that Metromedia did not apply. The court also held that "[a]s in Discovery Network, the City's use of a content-based ban rather than a valid time, place, or manner restriction indicates that the City has not carefully calculated the costs and benefits associated with the burden on speech imposed by its discriminatory, content-based prohibition." Id. The court held the availability of narrower alternatives is a criterion to consider under the fourth criterion. Id. Metromedia did not apply because the ordinance failed Central Hudson's fourth prong. Id. at 744.

³⁹⁵ State v. DeAngelo, 963 A.2d 1200 (N.J. 2009) (ten-foot-tall inflatable rat-shaped balloon on a sidewalk; held content-based, strict scrutiny applied because grand opening signs were exempted; ordinance did not fairly advance any compelling governmental interests; violation of ordinance depended on purpose for which a sign was displayed; a balloon was not more harmful to safety or aesthetics than a similar item displayed in a grand opening; ordinance overly broad, virtually eliminated all signs with few exceptions, no readily available alternative); Kitsap County v. Mattress Outlet, 104 P.3d 1280 (Wash. 2005) (reinforced, rigid and flat raincoats with messages about store; third and fourth Central Hudson tests failed; "prohibiting persons from wearing signage provides minimal, if any, benefit in aesthetics and safety"; signs prohibited were no more hazardous to traffic or aesthetically offensive than many signs exempted; ban not narrowly tailored). Compare Constr. & Gen. Laborers' Union No. 330 v. Town of Grand Chute, 915 F.3d 1120, 1121 (7th Cir. 2019) (ordinance prohibiting inflatable signs in public right-of-way systematically

§ 4:6[3]. Display, Size, and Height Limitations

Sign ordinances can limit the length of time a portable sign can be displayed during any one year, the period of time during which a portable sign can be displayed continuously, its size and height, and the number of portable signs allowed on a property. Courts usually uphold these limitations. An Eleventh Circuit case upheld height limits and a requirement that allowed only one portable sign on a property.³⁹⁶ It applied a relaxed standard of judicial review, accepted these requirements as a partial solution to the city's aesthetic problems, and noted that portable sign regulation was only one part of a comprehensive effort to improve the city's appearance.³⁹⁷

Another Eleventh Circuit case³⁹⁸ summarily upheld a sign ordinance that limited the maximum number of portable signs for a business to one temporary permit every six months for a maximum of sixteen days. The city had expressed an interest in aesthetics³⁹⁹ and, by allowing a limited number of portable signs, it narrowly tailored these restrictions to meet its purposes because it could have decided to prohibit portable signs as an alternative.⁴⁰⁰ An ordinance is enforced).

³⁹⁶ Don's Porta Signs, Inc. v. Clearwater, 829 F.2d 1051 (11th Cir. 1987). See accord Wilson v. City of Louisville, 957 F. Supp. 948 (W.D. Ky. 1997) (size and height limits; hearings held and testimony taken on ordinance; court also upheld requirements that limited portable signs to advertising services or products available on the site or noncommercial messages, and that limited their display to the hours of operation of a business, profession, trade or occupation).

³⁹⁷ The court relied on, Harnish v. Manatee County, 783 F.2d 1535 (11th Cir. 1986), to hold that that the regulation was no more extensive than necessary to accomplish the city's goals. The Harnish case upheld a total ban on portable signs.

³⁹⁸ Messer v. Douglasville, 975 F.2d 1505, 1514 (11th Cir. 1992). Accord Mobile Sign, Inc. v. Brookhaven, 670 F. Supp. 68 (E.D.N.Y. 1987) (six-month time limit, adopting relaxed view of legislative judgment that decided to limit length of display, not necessary to regulate all unattractive media of commercial speech, limitation did not restrict speech more broadly than necessary). See also City of Hot Springs v. Carter, 836 S.W.2d 863 (Ark. 1992) (rejecting equal protection claim); Hilton v. City of Toledo, 405 N.E.2d 1047 (Ohio 1980) (upholding time limits pre-Metromedia). Contra Risner v. City of Wyoming, 383 N.W.2d 226 (Mich. Ct. App. 1985) (60-day display period per year; ordinance failed to sufficiently advance governmental interests asserted or reached further than necessary to accomplish those objectives; safety hazards could be remedied by other provisions of sign code, time limit did not address them).

³⁹⁹ The court quoted the statement of purpose for the ordinance in a footnote. Messer, 975 F.2d, at 1514 n.8.

⁴⁰⁰ The court relied on Harnish v. Manatee County, 783 F.2d 1535 (11th Cir. 1986), which upheld a ban on portable signs. It rejected Dills v. City of Marietta, 674 F.2d 1377 (11th Cir. 1982), which invalidated time limits and restricted display options for portable signs because there was no evidence in that case to support the city's aesthetic interest in these restrictions. See also People v. Target Adver. Inc., 708 N.Y.S.2d 597, 602 (N.Y. City Crim. Ct. 2000) (upholding city traffic rule that barred operation of vehicles solely for purpose of displaying commercial advertising; regulation advanced government's interest in controlling traffic; ban on advertising-only vehicles lessened amount of potential traffic on city streets; regulation not more extensive than necessary, exceptions support rule; Dills rejected).

content-based when some signs are allowed to be larger than other signs based on content.⁴⁰¹

Some courts struck down regulations limiting the time that portable signs could be displayed.⁴⁰²

§ 4:7. Price Signs

Sign ordinances can prohibit the display of prices, allow the display of prices in some zoning districts but not others, or limit where businesses may display prices on-premises. These restrictions raise content neutrality issues. Supreme Court cases holding that prohibiting price advertising is invalid have influenced decisions on sign ordinances that regulate prices. In Virginia State Bd. of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council,⁴⁰³ for example, the Supreme Court held invalid a statutory ban on the advertising of prescription drugs by pharmacists. The ban effectively prohibited the dissemination of price information about the drugs, which only licensed pharmacists could dispense. The Court rejected an argument that the harmful effects of price advertising on the pharmaceutical profession justified the prohibition:

There is, of course, an alternative to this highly paternalistic approach. That alternative is to assume that this information is not in itself harmful, that people will perceive their own best interests if only they are well enough informed, and that the best means to that end is to open the channels of communication rather than to close them.⁴⁰⁴

Early state cases relied on Virginia Pharmacy to invalidate ordinances that regulated the display of prices on signs. In a Georgia case,⁴⁰⁵ the court struck down an ordinance, as applied to a self-service gas station, which prohibited businesses from posting price signs. It permitted signs ⁴⁰¹ Johnsonville, LLC v. City of Buffalo, 2022 WL 1297835, at *4 (Minn. Ct. App. May 2, 2022) (holiday signs allowed to be larger than flags; strict scrutiny applied, but city failed to satisfy strict scrutiny review).

⁴⁰² All American Sign Rentals, Inc. v. City of Orlando, 592 F. Supp. 85, 88 (M.D. Fla. 1983) (holding ordinance regulating portable trailer signs by requiring signs to be set back 400 feet and limiting usage to 45 days on premises followed by 75 days off premises unconstitutional because it singled out portable signs for restriction under the pretext of safety and aesthetics when similar restrictions were not placed on other signs); Risner v. City of Wyoming, 383 N.W.2d 226, 229 (Mich. App. 1985) (invalidating ordinance limiting display of temporary display signs to 60 days per year violates first amendment; aesthetic concerns, traffic obstruction, poor anchoring and electrical hazards do not justify this limitation; periodic change would make distraction worse).

⁴⁰³ 425 U.S. 748 (1976). See also Liquormart v. State of Rhode Island, 517 U.S. 484 (1996) (plurality; striking down statute that prohibited advertising of liquor prices; plurality decision); Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350 (1977) (invalidating prohibition on advertising the prices of routine legal services).

⁴⁰⁴ Virginia Pharmacy, 425 U.S. at 770.

⁴⁰⁵ H & H Operations, Inc. v. Peachtree City, 283 S.E.2d 867 (Ga. 1981). Accord City of Lakewood v. Colfax Unlimited Asso., 634 P.2d 52 (Colo. 1981) (price signs permitted in some zones and prohibited in others).

containing the name of a business and the category of products available on the premises, but not prices. The city offered an aesthetic justification for this distinction, but the court held that price numbers were not inferior to letters that formed words. Alternate means of communication were more expensive and less likely to reach persons seeking or not seeking this information.

For similar reasons, a group of New York cases struck down ordinances that limited price signs to gasoline pumps at filling stations.⁴⁰⁶ Cases in federal district courts held ordinances invalid as content-based that prohibited price information on signs but that also had many other content-based distinctions.⁴⁰⁷

An Ohio case was more accepting. It upheld an ordinance that prohibited price signs adjacent to freeways with a speed limit of more than fifty miles an hour, within 660 feet of the Interstate System, and that prevented a lodging facility from displaying its weekly rates.⁴⁰⁸ The court did not consider the content neutrality issue but deferred to the legislative judgment on the importance of controlling signs along highways. "Like the court in Metromedia, we will not second-guess the city's common-sense conclusion that limiting the text of advertising signs generally reduces visual clutter along the highway and reduces the possibility of traffic accidents."⁴⁰⁹ Evidentiary proof was not required, and Metromedia applied even though the sign was an on-premises sign rather than a billboard.⁴¹⁰

⁴⁰⁶ People v. Mobil Oil Corp., 397 N.E.2d 724 (N.Y. 1979) (county had not demonstrated that place of speech had a detrimental secondary effect on society; far from clear that law did not withhold useful consumer information from public; serious questions concerning adequacy of available alternates); Zoepy Marie, Inc. v. Town of Greenburgh, 477 N.Y.S.2d 411 (App. Div. 1984) (no triable issues of fact on aesthetic need for regulation, availability of alternate marketing techniques, or need to control deceptive advertising); People v. Durham, 415 N.Y.S.2d 183 (N.Y. Dist. Ct. 1979) (ordinance content-based and left no ample alternate channel of communication, as shown by drastic reduction in sales when ordinance enforced). See also accord City of Lakewood v. Colfax Unlimited Asso., 634 P.2d 52 (Colo. 1981) (price signs permitted in some zoning districts but not others, along with other content-based distinctions; relationship to safety and aesthetic purposes too attenuated).

⁴⁰⁷ XXL of Ohio, Inc. v. City of Broadview Heights, 341 F. Supp. 2d 765 (N.D. Ohio 2004) (restrictions on showing or not showing price held content-based along with other content-based restrictions, and did not logically advance city's goals); North Olmsted Chamber of Commerce v. City of North Olmsted, 86 F. Supp. 2d 755 (N.D. Ohio 2000) (prohibition on showing price, along with other content-based restrictions, held content-based and invalid). Courts held restrictions on the display of price information unconstitutional before the Supreme Court applied the free speech clause to commercial speech. See, e.g., Carlin v. City of Palm Springs, 92 Cal. Rptr. 535 (Cal. App. 1971) (distinction between rate and nonrated sign held arbitrary and content-based).

⁴⁰⁸ Suburban Lodges of Am., Inc. v. City of Columbus Graphics Comm'n, 761 N.E.2d 1060 (Ohio App. 2000).

⁴⁰⁹ Id. at 1067.

⁴¹⁰ The court also held that whether the ordinance advanced the city's aesthetic interest was not to be judged by its effect only on plaintiff's prohibited sign, and that an alternate regulation limiting the size of letters and number of

§ 4:8. Time and Temperature Signs

A time and temperature sign is a noncommercial electronic or digital sign with specific content. It displays this information electronically with changing or moving digits, which may or may not be lighted, but is typically illuminated. Sign ordinances often exempt these signs from a ban on flashing, moving, or electronic signs.

An exemption for noncommercial signs in the San Diego sign ordinance was held unconstitutional in Metromedia.⁴¹¹ Time and temperature signs were among the exempted signs, so courts can follow Metromedia and hold that an exemption of time and temperature signs is unconstitutional. One group of cases adopted this view and held time and temperature sign exemptions in sign ordinances content-based and not narrowly tailored when they were one of numerous content-based exemptions that undermined the aesthetic and traffic safety interests the ordinance served.⁴¹²

An exemption for public service signs such as time and temperature signs in a state's highway beautification act and regulations was held unconstitutional in Flying J Travel Plaza v. Transportation Cabinet, Dep't of Highways.⁴¹³ The regulation prohibited signs displaying flashing, moving, or intermittent lights but exempted signs displaying time, date, temperature, or weather, limited to one cycle of four displays with a five-second maximum completion time. The regulation was unconstitutional because “[w]hen the regulation prohibits commercial speech but allows time, date, temperature or weather information to be displayed, the regulations become substantially broader than necessary to protect the governmental interest of highway safety.”⁴¹⁴ They were also content-based because “[t]here is no reasonable relation between the mere content of the message words for each sign would not be as effective and would not be less restrictive. The prohibition in the ordinance also was not undercut because it allowed temporary real estate and construction signs along highways and freeways without limiting the text of such signs, and because it failed to limit the text on signs along other, more visually cluttered streets.

⁴¹¹ Metromedia, Inc. v. City of San Diego, 453 U.S. 490, 514 (1981).

⁴¹² Solantic, LLC v. City of Neptune Beach, 410 F.3d 1250 (11th Cir. 2005); Bonita Media Enters., LLC v. Collier County Code Enforcement Bd., 2008 WL 423449 (M.D. Fla. 2008) (exemption held content-based); King Enters. v. Thomas Twp., 215 F. Supp. 2d 891 (E.D. Mich. 2002) (also held to discriminate against noncommercial speech); North Olmsted Chamber of Commerce v. City of North Olmsted, 86 F. Supp. 2d 755 (N.D. Ohio 2000).

⁴¹³ 928 S.W.2d 344 (Ky. 1996) (also holding the statute and regulation discriminated among different kinds of noncommercial speech).

⁴¹⁴ Id. at 348.

itself and the safety of the driving public.”⁴¹⁵

§ 4:9. Window Signs

Sign ordinances often limit the area of a window that can be used for window signs, and courts have upheld this type of restriction. An Arizona court pre-Reed upheld a sign ordinance limiting window signs to 30 percent of the window area.⁴¹⁶ Although there was no formal study, the city received considerable input on the subject of window coverage and aesthetics before enacting the ordinance. Thirty percent was a reasonable compromise between a total ban of signage and a limited ban. The ordinance was narrowly tailored because it addressed only signs that were inside the window pane, and allowed alternative methods of communication, including signs hanging outside the window sill area. The restriction was a reasonable fit, as “exact justifications for what are essentially subjective judgments are not required.”⁴¹⁷

§ 4:10. Wind Signs

Wind signs are sometimes used as an on-premises sign. In Palmer v. City of Missoula,⁴¹⁸ a post-Reed case, a federal district court upheld an ordinance prohibiting wind signs in a case in which an automobile dealer attached balloons to his vehicles. The court held the ordinance was not content-based. It applied the Central Hudson criteria to hold that traffic and safety interests were substantially advanced, that the ordinance contained a statement of purpose, that formal ⁴¹⁵ Id. at 350. Compare the principal of three opinions in La Tour v. City of Fayetteville, 442 F.3d 1094 (8th Cir. 2006), holding a failure to enforce a prohibition of animated signs against time-and-temperature signs was content-neutral because the desire to promote traffic safety was not tied to content. Accord, Chapin Furniture Outlet, Inc. v. Town of Chapin, 2006 WL 2711851, (D.S.C. Sept. 20, 2006), vacated & remanded as moot, 252 F. App'x 566 (4th Cir. 2007) (exemption of time and temperature signs from ordinance prohibiting flashing signs did not "suggest a preference by the Town for certain messages or discriminate against others based on content"), rev'd and remanded as moot after ordinance amended to remove exemption, 252 Fed. Appx. 566 (4th Cir. 2007); Covenant Media of Illinois, L.L.C. v. City of Des Plaines, Ill., 2005 WL 2277313 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 15, 2005) (exemptions did not regulate with respect to a particular viewpoint or favored cause; other exemptions included).

A concurring opinion in La Tour held that preventing a proliferation of flashing signs was a content-neutral justification for distinguishing between electronic signs, which would likely trigger proliferation, and time-and-temperature signs, which would not trigger proliferation. Id. at 1097-1100. There was a dissenting opinion. See also Desert Outdoor Adver., Inc. v. City of Oakland, 506 F.3d 798 (9th Cir. 2007) (upholding severance of time and temperature exemption by district court as unconstitutional, but explaining that exemption did not show that ordinance applied to noncommercial speech); Robert L. Rieke Bldg. Co. v. Overland Park, 657 P.2d 1121 (Kan. 1983) (time and temperature signs properly distinguished from searchlights, because time and temperature signs do not create traffic hazards and do not have adverse effects on adjacent property).

⁴¹⁶ Salib v. City of Mesa, 133 P.3d 756, 762 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2006)

⁴¹⁷ Id. at 763.

⁴¹⁸ Palmer v. City of Missoula, Montana, 2017 WL 1277460 (D. Mont. Apr. 4, 2017) (D. Mont. Apr. 4, 2017).

studies were not necessary, and that the ordinance was no more extensive than necessary. “By applying the prohibition only to signs that wave in the wind, the ordinance targets precisely those advertisements that are most likely to distract and annoy drivers and passersby.”⁴¹⁹

⁴¹⁹ Id. at * 3.

CHAPTER V. REGULATIONS FOR THE DISPLAY OF ON-PREMISES SIGNS

§ 5:1. An Overview

Sign ordinances typically contain several regulations for the display of on-premises signs.⁴²⁰ Some control the physical characteristics of signs, such as their size, spacing, height, and setback.⁴²¹ Courts usually uphold this type of regulation because it does not prohibit signs but regulates their physical characteristics that can affect aesthetics and traffic safety. Sign ordinances also deal with less tangible elements such as color and illumination.

Courts apply the Central Hudson criteria and the time, place, and manner rules when they review regulations for the display of on-premises signs. They especially ask whether they are narrowly tailored and whether adequate alternate methods of communication are available. The special character of the visual environment was an important factor in some cases that upheld a display regulation, as in cases upholding bans on certain types of illumination.

§ 5:2. Animation, Flashing, Illumination, and Changeable Signs

Signs may have features that change their static character. An animated sign is an example. An animated sign is "[a] sign employing actual motion, the illusion of motion, or light and/or color changes achieved through mechanical, electrical, or electronic means."⁴²² Illumination is another example. Illumination is "[a] source of any artificial or reflected light."⁴²³ A changeable sign is [a]nother. A changeable sign is "[a] sign with the capability of content change by means of manual or remote output."⁴²⁴ Although these sign features can provide an attractive visual environment in some settings, a municipality may want to control or prohibit some or all of them, either throughout the municipality or in certain areas. Signs must then display the designated feature in the manner required or eliminate it if prohibited.

⁴²⁰ See Luce v. Town of Campbell, Wisconsin, 872 F.3d 512, 517 (7th Cir. 2017) (challenge to ban on signs within 100 feet of end of overpass structure remanded for trial).

⁴²¹ See Lamar Advert. of Michigan, Inc. v. City of Utica, 819 F. Supp. 2d 657 (E.D. Mich. 2011) (spacing limitations not narrowly tailored when city could exempt signs on city property). See also § 4:2 (digital signs.)

⁴²² Model On-Premises Sign Code § 7, supra note 396, at 15. The definition also defines different types of animated signs.

⁴²³ Street Graphics Model Ordinance § 1.03, in Street Graphics, supra note 3, at 72.

⁴²⁴ Model On-Premises Sign Code § 7, supra note 396, at 17. The definition also defines different types of changeable signs.

Courts upheld prohibitions on animated and flashing signs pre-Reed.⁴²⁵ In Marras v. City of Livonia,⁴²⁶ a district court held that prohibitions on flashing and "moving" signs⁴²⁷ were content-neutral because they did not draw distinctions based on the message the sign conveyed but on how it was presented. They did not regulate speech but regulated "what form speech may take."⁴²⁸ Another district court upheld a ban on changeable copy ground signs for two or more tenants as a measure to reduce the number of distracting signs and visual clutter.⁴²⁹ Content-based distinctions between signs that can and cannot have changeable copy are invalid.⁴³⁰

A court of appeals applied the Central Hudson criteria to uphold a ban on inflatable signs that was applied to a car dealership as content-neutral.⁴³¹ The ordinance disallowed "elements which revolve, rotate, whirl, spin or otherwise make use of motion to attract attention," and banned signs that "contain or consist of flags, banners, posters, pennants, ribbons, streamers, spinners, ⁴²⁵ La Tour v. City of Fayetteville, 442 F.3d 1094 (8th Cir. 2006) (principal opinion; prohibited signs that flash, blink or are animated; content-neutral and narrowly tailored); Marras v. City of Livonia, 575 F. Supp. 2d 807 (E.D. Mich. 2008) (flashing and moving signs prohibited; content-neutral time, place and manner regulation, not a regulation of speech but of form speech takes); Singer Supermarkets, Inc. v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustments, 443 A.2d 1082 (N.J. App. Div. 1982) (upholding ban on flashing signs under Central Hudson criteria); Pawtucket CVS, Inc. v. Gannon, 2006 WL 998242 (R.I. Super. Apr. 14, 2006) (same); Meredith v. City of Lincoln City, 2008 WL 4937809 (D. Or. Nov. 6, 2008) (upholding denial of structural change to nonconforming sign for electronic display). See also Hilton v. City of Toledo, 405 N.E.2d 1047 (Ohio 1980) (upholding prohibition on flashing portable signs, free speech issues not considered).

⁴²⁶ 575 F. Supp. 2d 807 (E.D. Mich. 2008).

⁴²⁷ Under the ordinance, a "flashing sign" was defined as a sign that is "intermittently illuminated or reflects light intermittently from either an artificial source or from the sun, or any sign which has movement of any illumination such as intermittent, flashing, or varying intensity, or in which the color is not constant, whether caused by artificial or natural sources." A moving sign was defined as a sign that "has motion either constantly or at intervals, or . . . gives the impression of movement through intermittent flashing, scintillating, or varying the intensity of illumination whether or not said illumination is reflected from an artificial source or from the sun." Id. at 815-816.

⁴²⁸ Id.

⁴²⁹ Rigsby v. City of Huntsville, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1104 (N.D. Ala. 1988). See also Harnish v. Manatee County 783 F.2d 1535 (11th Cir. 1986). The court upheld a ban on portable and changeable copy signs. A "changeable copy" sign was defined as "[a]n Integral part of a sign not covering more than 65% of the total sign area and design so as to readily allow the changing of its message by removable letters, panels, posters, etc." The court held that the total ban advanced the government goal of protecting the aesthetic environment of the county, and that the county did not have to adopt less restrictive means to achieve this objective. The temporary nature of the changeable copy signs influenced the decision.

⁴³⁰ North Olmsted Chamber of Commerce v. City of North Olmsted, 86 F. Supp. 2d 755, 768 (N.D. Ohio 2000) (unclear why "informational sign" may have changeable copy, but sign presenting "issue" to the public may not have changeable copy; content of one type of sign certainly not "safer" or inherently more "aesthetically pleasing" than the other).

⁴³¹ PHN Motors, LLC v. Medina Twp., 498 Fed. App'x 540 (6th Cir. 2012).

balloons, and/or any inflatable devices, searchlight or other similar moving devices.” The ban was narrowly tailored and advanced aesthetic and traffic safety interests. The court recognized the need to clean up the appearance of commercial areas through sign controls, and that large, eye-catching inflatable devices could distract drivers' attention from the road and other traffic. The ban was not more extensive than necessary because the dealership had other means of advertising available.

§ 5:3. Color

Color can be an important element in the design of signs; good design makes good use of color. Sign ordinances can regulate color in several ways. They may specify the colors that signs may use, limit the number of colors a sign can have, or provide a design review process in which color is one of the elements that design review considers.

Content neutrality is an issue when sign ordinances include color as a basis for regulation. The Supreme Court considered the content neutrality issue when it upheld a federal statute that required federal currency illustrations to be printed in black and white and in a certain size. It held the statute was a content-neutral time, place, and manner regulation because the color and size requirements restricted only the manner in which currency illustrations were presented.⁴³² They did not prevent the expression of any views, and enforcement did not require the government to evaluate the nature of the message expressed. The color limitation served a compelling governmental interest in preventing counterfeiting because it made it more difficult for counterfeiters to gain access to negatives they could alter and use for counterfeiting purposes.⁴³³

Cases that considered color regulation in sign ordinances rely on this case and have held that regulating color is a content-neutral time, place, and manner regulation. In City of Tipp City v. Dakin,⁴³⁴ for example, an Ohio court upheld color limitations in a sign ordinance that allowed no more than five colors for most signs:

In limiting signs to five colors, Tipp City is not seeking to suppress the content of a message. Instead, it is restricting only the manner in which the appellants' mural may be displayed.... The fact that Tipp City's color limit may have an incidental impact on an artist "who aspires to use allegedly lurid colors to express himself"

⁴³² Regan v. Time, Inc., 468 U.S. 641, 655-656 (1984). Regulation of color may create problems under the Lanham Act, if color is part of a trademark. See Street Graphics, supra note 3, at 99.

⁴³³ At the time, only one negative and plate were required for black-and-white printing, but color printing required multiple negatives and plates. The greater number of color negatives and plates increased a counterfeiter's access to them, and allowed him to use them more easily for counterfeiting purposes under the guise of a legitimate project.

⁴³⁴ 929 N.E.2d 484 (Ohio Ct. App. 2010).

does not make the five-color limit impermissibly content-based. [citing case] To the contrary, if uniformly applied, a five-color limit would be a time, place, and manner restriction justified by aesthetic and safety concerns.⁴³⁵

A federal district court upheld, as a time, place, and manner regulation, a historic district ordinance that required the Board of Architectural Review to review exterior structural alterations to consider the “general design, scale of buildings, arrangement, texture, materials and color of the structure in question, and the relation of such elements to similar features of structures in the immediate surroundings.”⁴³⁶ The Board applied these criteria to reject a permit for the display of a mural on the wall of a restaurant. The court held that color, size, and other restrictions were valid and affected only the format or manner in which a mural could be displayed. Review under the ordinance did not stifle, suppress, or interfere with the content or message of protected speech. It was directed only at reviewing a proposed alteration's mode of delivery of speech to decide whether it complied with specified regulatory criteria. This case involved a historic district, and control of color is more easily supported in historic districts where it can be an important element of a historic setting. Another district court upheld a design review program to implement an Old World Bavarian-Alpine theme for its commercial area where color was one of the design criteria.⁴³⁷

Narrow tailoring is an issue in the regulation of color, although a court may hold it is not a problem because an ordinance that controls only color limits this design element. In a related case, the Eleventh Circuit held an ordinance that limited news rack colors to beige and brown was narrowly tailored as a valid time, place, and manner regulation.⁴³⁸ Uniform color and size of lettering requirements were narrowly tailored to achieve the city's interest in reducing visibility and minimizing visual blight. They did not completely ban news racks from public rights-of-way nor prohibit the sale and distribution of newspapers, and publishers could display their name or ⁴³⁵ Id. at 502.

⁴³⁶ Burke v. City of Charleston, 893 F. Supp. 589 (D.S.C 1995), vacated and remanded for lack of standing, 139 F.3d 401 (4th Cir. 1998).

⁴³⁷ Demarest v. City of Leavenworth, 876 F. Supp.2d 1186 (E.D. Wash. 2012). See also § 5:4, discussing design review, and § 2:8[3], discussing the constitutionality of design review standards.

⁴³⁸ Gold Coast Publications v. Corrigan, 42 F.3d 1336 (11th Cir. 1994). See also Graff v. City of Chicago, 9 F.3d 1309 (7th Cir. 1993) (upholding as a time, place and manner regulation an ordinance requiring uniform color requirements for newsstands).

logo in any color they selected.

§ 5.4. Design Review

Sign ordinances may require design review,⁴³⁹ which can present a content neutrality problem if it requires a design that has identifiable content or if it authorizes the review of sign content. Pre-Reed cases upheld ordinances that had design review standards. In Lusk v. Village of Cold Spring,⁴⁴⁰ the ordinance required a Certificate of Appropriateness for alterations of historic properties in a historic district based on a review that considered criteria such as “[t]he general design, character and appropriateness to the property of the proposed alteration” and the “[v]isual compatibility with surrounding properties, including proportion of the property’s front facade.”⁴⁴¹ The village refused to issue a certificate for a sign on a historic building.

The court held the ordinance was a prior restraint on speech because it did not include time limits for decisions on whether to issue certificates but did not invalidate the ordinance standards. Although admitting that the standards would be unconstitutional if applied to allow the review of a sign’s content, the court concluded that they would be “constitutional when applied to general principles of architecture and design, even though its specific application to the content of any signage would not be.”⁴⁴² It held that “We therefore read Chapter 64 to apply to architecture and design only and thus interpret it not to authorize the Review Board to review, approve, or disapprove of the content of any proposed or existing signage.”⁴⁴³ The historical context of the historic district helped support the constitutionality of the standards in this ordinance.

⁴³⁹ Section 2:8[3] discusses the prior restraint problem presented by standards included in design review ordinances and by the requirement that discretionary procedures like design review should contain time limits.

⁴⁴⁰ 475 F.3d 480 (2d Cir. 2007).

⁴⁴¹ The standards in full provided that the “alteration of designated property shall be compatible with its historic character, and with exterior features of neighboring properties.” In applying the compatibility principle, the Review Board was to consider “(a) The general design, character and appropriateness to the property of the proposed alteration or new construction; (b) The scale of proposed alteration or new construction in relation to the property itself, surrounding properties, and the neighborhood; (c) Texture and materials, and their relation to similar features of the properties in the neighborhood; (d) Visual compatibility with surrounding properties, including proportion of the property’s front facade, proportion and arrangement of windows and other openings within the facade and roof shape; and (e) The importance of architectural or other features to the historic significance of the property.” Id. at 494.

⁴⁴² Id. at 496.

⁴⁴³ Id.

Demarest v. City of Leavenworth⁴⁴⁴ upheld a design review program that prohibited any sign within commercial districts that was "not compatible in design, lettering style, and color with the Old World Bavarian-Alpine theme." The court held the Bavarian theme requirement was viewpoint-neutral and content-neutral. It did not make "[a]nything non-Bavarian ... a disfavored message suppressed by the regulations," and the city enforced design review by regulating physical attributes, such as size, shape, number, placement, font, and colors. Other cases have also held that design standards based on physical or architectural elements did not present a content neutrality problem.⁴⁴⁵

§ 5:5. Height and Size Limitations

Sign ordinances usually limit the height and size of on-premises signs.⁴⁴⁶ These limits may differ depending on the type of sign and its location or depending on the distance a sign is set back from a road or property line. Ordinances may set absolute size limits that vary by location for different types of signs, or provide a maximum square footage allowance for wall signs based on the ratio of the sign area to street frontage or wall area.

⁴⁴⁴ 876 F. Supp.2d 1186 (E.D. Wash. 2012). The court also held that the aesthetics, tourism, traffic/pedestrian safety, and economic vitality interests advanced by the code were substantial, that the Bavarian theme was not an artificial made-up asset, and that the different treatment of signs in the ordinance did not violate the Central Hudson criteria.

⁴⁴⁵ See Catsiff v. McCarty, 274 P.3d 1063 (Wash. Ct. App. 2012) (holding downtown design standards were content-neutral and regulated size and placement). The standards provided:

Wall signs must be either painted upon the wall, mounted flat against the building, or erected against and parallel to the wall not extending out more than twelve inches therefrom. Wall signs shall be located no higher than thirty feet above grade The maximum combined area of all wall signs per street frontage shall not exceed twenty-five percent of the wall area. No combination of sign areas of any kind shall exceed one hundred fifty square feet per street frontage.

Id. at 1067-1068. The court held these standards were a reasonable fit, and that the city had a legitimate regulatory interest in adopting them. The legislative history showed the wall sign size and height restrictions were adopted as part of a comprehensive plan to address aesthetics and traffic control.

⁴⁴⁶ Limitations on size are usually included with limitations on height, and courts often consider both limitations together.

Courts had little difficulty pre-Reed upholding size⁴⁴⁷ and height⁴⁴⁸ limits under the Central Hudson criteria or as time, place, and manner rules. They held they were not content-based and advanced legitimate interests in aesthetics and traffic safety.⁴⁴⁹ They also held that they left adequate alternate means of communication open because they were not a complete ban.⁴⁵⁰ One ⁴⁴⁷ Wag More Dogs, LLC v. Cozart, 680 F.3d 359 (4th Cir. 2012) (60 square feet or one square foot per linear foot of frontage limit); Get Outdoors II, LLC v. City of San Diego, 506 F.3d 886 (9th Cir. 2007) (specified limits on ground signs); Prime Media, Inc. v. City of Brentwood, 398 F.3d 814 (6th Cir. 2005) (regulation narrowly tailored); Outdoor Sys., Inc. v. City of Mesa, 997 F.2d 604 (9th Cir. 1993) (onsite signs limited in size and number according to location of property); Sopp Signs, LLC v. City Of Buford, Ga., 2012 WL 2681417 (N.D. Ga. July 6, 2012) (200 square feet); Herson v. City of Richmond, 827 F. Supp. 2d 1088 (N.D. Cal. 2011) (freestanding signs within 660 feet of a freeway or a parkway could not exceed 12 feet in height or 40 square feet in area), aff'd, 631 Fed. Appx. 472 (9th Cir. 2016); Herson v. City of San Carlos, 714 F. Supp. 2d 1018, 1026 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (largest pole sign could be 65 feet tall with a total sign area of 1125 square feet, but only on a freeway-oriented parcel with three or more businesses that received permission for a 25 per cent increase in the applicable sign allowance), aff'd on other grounds, 433 Fed. Appx. 569 (9th Cir. 2011); Scadron v. City of Des Plaines, 734 F. Supp. 1437, 1446 (N.D. Ill. 1990) (ground signs, 480 square feet), aff'd, 989 F.2d 502 (7th Cir. 1993); Donrey Communications Co. v. Fayetteville, 660 S.W.2d 900, 903 (Ark. 1983) (75 square feet); Kyrch v. Town of Burr Ridge, 444 N.E.2d 229, 232-33 (Ill. App. Ct. 1982) (120 square foot size limit on ground signs); State v. Spano, 966 N.E.2d 908, 914 (Ohio. Ct. App. 2011) (special event signs limited to 32 square feet); Village of Ottawa Hills v. Afjeh, 2006 WL 1449819 (Ohio Ct. App. 2004) (ten square feet limit based on research and consultation; may be visual distraction that could impact traffic safety and aesthetics); Catsiff v. McCarthy, 274 P.3d 1063, 1067 (Wash. Ct. App. 2012) (wall signs in central business district limited to 25 percent of wall area). See also Kolbe v. Baltimore County, 730 F. Supp. 2d 478 (D. Md. 2010) (upholding eight square foot size limit on temporary signs). But see Lamar Advert. of Michigan, Inc. v. City of Utica, 819 F. Supp. 2d 657 (E.D. Mich. 2011) (size limits not narrowly tailored when city could exempt signs on city property).

⁴⁴⁸ Get Outdoors II, LLC v. City of San Diego, 506 F.3d 886, 893-894 (9th Cir. 2007) (pole height of signs in multiple areas limited to 20 or 30 feet); Prime Media, Inc. v. City of Brentwood, 398 F.3d 814 (6th Cir. 2005) (regulation narrowly tailored); Sopp Signs, LLC v. City Of Buford, Ga., 2012 WL 2681417 (N.D. Ga. July 6, 2012) (20 feet); Herson v. City of Richmond, 827 F. Supp. 2d 1088 (N.D. Cal. 2011) (freestanding signs within 660 feet of a freeway or a parkway could not exceed 12 feet in height or 40 square feet in area), aff'd, 631 Fed. Appx. 472 (9th Cir. 2016); Herson v. City of San Carlos, 714 F. Supp. 2d 1018, 1026 (N.D. Ca. 2010) (largest pole sign could be 65 feet tall with a total sign area of 1125 square feet, but only on a freeway-oriented parcel with three or more businesses that received permission for a 25 per cent increase in the applicable sign allowance), aff'd on other grounds 433 Fed. Appx. 569 (9th Cir. 2011); Marathon Outdoor, LLC v. Vesconti, 107 F. Supp. 2d 355, 366-367 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (signs within 15 feet of a street must be less than 30 feet in height); Scadron v. City of Des Plaines, 734 F. Supp. 1437, 1446-1447 (N.D. Ill. 1990) (ground signs no more than 35 feet high), aff'd, 989 F.2d 502 (7th Cir. 1993); Kyrch v. Burr Ridge, 444 N.E.2d 229, 232-233 (Ill. App. Ct. 1982) (16 foot height limit on ground signs); Trinity Assembly of God of Baltimore City, Inc. v. People's Counsel for Baltimore County, 962 A.2d 404, 421-423 (Md. 2008) (six foot height limit on signs); Catsiff v. McCarthy, 274 P.3d 1063, 1067-1069 (Wash. Ct. App. 2012) (wall signs in business district no more than 30 feet above grade). See also accord, Parrack v. Town of Estes Park, 628 P.2d 1014 (Colo. 1981) (signs that project from a structure must be more than nine feet above grade).

⁴⁴⁹ Some of these cases noted that the ordinance contained a preamble or statement of purpose, e.g., Donrey Communications Co. v. Fayetteville, 660 S.W.2d 900, 903 (Ark. 1983); Catsiff v. McCarthy, 274 P.3d 1063, 1068 (Wash. Ct. App. 2012) (purpose section adequate though did not mention aesthetics or traffic safety; reference to "visual clutter" sufficient). See § 3:3.

⁴⁵⁰ Get Outdoors II, LLC v. City of San Diego, 506 F.3d 886 (9th Cir. 2007) (specified limits on ground signs). See also Donrey Communications Co. v. Fayetteville, 660 S.W.2d 900, 903 (Ark. 1983) (75 square foot limit; valid even though prevented use of standard poster and required poster that was 50 percent more expensive).

case upheld ground sign size limits that the ordinance calibrated with the width and speed of adjacent streets.⁴⁵¹

*Marathon Outdoor, LLC v. Vesconti*⁴⁵² is a typical case pre-Reed. The court upheld a New York City ordinance limiting signs within fifteen feet of a street to less than 30 feet in height. It was narrowly tailored, promoted public safety and aesthetics, and did not foreclose alternate channels of communication because it only regulated maximum height. Signs were not banned entirely but were required only to meet certain structural guidelines that promoted the government's interests in health, safety, general welfare, and aesthetics. It was "common ground that governments may regulate the physical characteristics of signs."⁴⁵³ Courts have upheld size limits post-Reed.⁴⁵⁴

Careful study and public participation can help prove that size and height restrictions in an ordinance meet narrow tailoring requirements by showing a reasonable fit between legislative ends and means. As a Washington court noted:⁴⁵⁵

The legislative history shows the city carefully considered its sign size and height restrictions. Its sign code was a product of its stated policy of "working with downtown businessmen to develop a workable sign code specifically for the downtown area." A building improvement guide was commissioned that recommended a "sign should not dominate; its shape and proportions should fit your building just as a window or door fits." It suggested that "[s]ome types of signs ⁴⁵¹ Get Outdoors II, LLC v. City of San Diego, 506 F.3d 886 (9th Cir. 2007) (specified limits on ground signs). This method of calculation is explained in a study done by the United States Sign Council Foundation and published in Street Graphics, supra note 3, Chapter 4.

⁴⁵² 107 F. Supp. 2d 355, 366-367 (S.D.N.Y. 2000). See also Vosse v. The City of New York, Comm'r, 666 F. App'x 11, 13 (2d Cir. 2016) (upholding prohibition of illuminated signs more than 40 feet above curb level upheld as time, place and manner regulation; prohibition advanced aesthetic interest and was narrowly tailored; alternative channels available).

⁴⁵³ Quoting City of Ladue v. Gilleo, 512 U.S. 43, 48 (1994).

⁴⁵⁴ Baldwin Park Free Speech Coalition v. City of Baldwin Park, 2021 WL 4846059, at *7 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 18, 2021); Leibundguth Storage & Van Serv., Inc. v. Vill. of Downers Grove, Illinois, 939 F.3d 859, 862 (7th Cir. 2019) ("A limit on the size and presentation of signs is a standard time, place, and manner rule, a form of aesthetic zoning.") Shaw v. City of Bedford, 262 F. Supp. 3d 754 (S.D. Ind. 2017) (upholding differential size limitations on signs in residential districts as narrowly tailored; flags 60 square feet, temporary signs 36 square feet, permanent residential development entrance signs up to 102 square feet depending on size of development); www.RicardoPacheco.com v. City of Baldwin Park, 2017 WL 2962772 (C.D. Cal. July 10, 2017) (upholding differential size limitations on residential signs as time place and manner regulations; flags or pennants 18 square feet, permanent signs 12 square feet, for temporary window signs nine square feet, and other temporary signs 10 square feet).

⁴⁵⁵ Caitiff v. McCarthy, 274 P.3d 1063, 1068 (Wash. Ct. App. 2012) (wall signs in central business district limited to 25 percent of wall area and no more than 30 feet above grade).

are not appropriate, including ... oversized signs ... applied over the upper facade.” The city used those considerations when choosing its sign size and height limitation in 1991, and it continues to rely on them. The city’s consideration of such issues demonstrates reasonable legislative balancing based on local study and experience, which satisfies any calibration duty.

Courts uphold height and size limits on billboards more easily because billboards are adjacent to streets and highways, where they present aesthetic and traffic safety problems.⁴⁵⁶

§ 5:6. Illumination Through Lighting, Searchlights, and Neon

Sign ordinances may regulate illuminated signs. The United States Sign Council Foundation’s Model On-Premises Sign Code defines an illuminated sign as “[a] sign characterized by the use of artificial light, either projecting through its surface(s) [Internally or trans-illuminated]; or reflecting off its surface(s) [Externally illuminated].”⁴⁵⁷ A municipality can prohibit sign illumination throughout the community or in certain areas if they believe sign illumination is inconsistent with the visual environment.⁴⁵⁸

Illumination is necessary in a nighttime environment or it will not be visible and cannot be read. Standards developed by the United States Sign Council Foundation⁴⁵⁹ provide a basis for regulations that allow illumination appropriate for the nighttime environment.

Ordinances upheld by the courts usually regulate rather than prohibit illumination. For example, a court of appeals post-Reed upheld a ban on displaying illuminated signs more than forty feet above the street curb as a valid time, place, and manner regulation.⁴⁶⁰ The ordinance excluded non-illuminated, noncommercial signs less than 12 square feet in surface area. The court held the ordinance was narrowly tailored because it was reasonable for the city to prohibit all illuminated signs above a certain height, it advanced the city’s aesthetic interests, and there were ample alternate channels of communication.

In some cases when courts have upheld illumination regulations the distinctive character

⁴⁵⁶ E.g., Get Outdoors II, LLC v. City of El Cajon, 403 Fed. Appx. 284 (9th. Cir. 2010) (300 square foot limit and 35 foot height limit); King Enters. V. Thomas Twp., 215 F. Supp. 2d 891, 909 (E.D. Mich. 2002) (billboards limited to 200 square feet in area and 30 feet in height).

⁴⁵⁷ Model On-Premises Sign Code § 7, supra note 396, at 20.

⁴⁵⁸ See, generally, Annotation, Validity and Construction of Zoning Regulations Relating to Illuminated Signs, 30 A.L.R.5th 549 (1995).

⁴⁵⁹ Street Graphics, supra note 3, at 45.

⁴⁶⁰ Vosse v. The City of New York, Comm'r, 666 F. App'x 11, 13 (2d Cir. 2016).

of the protected visual environment has been a factor. Community character was an important factor in Asselin v. Town of Conway.⁴⁶¹ The New Hampshire Supreme Court summarily upheld an ordinance that banned internal but allowed external illumination in an important tourist town in the White Mountain National Forest. The ban on internally lit signs was "merely a content-neutral restriction on one of the myriad ways in which outdoor messages may be conveyed at night."⁴⁶² Externally lit signs and less expensive alternatives were available. Also rejecting substantive due process objections, the court held that the unregulated use of nighttime lighting would negatively affect "the natural appeal and general atmosphere of the area." An expert witness testified that internally illuminated signs appear as "disconnected squares of light" at dusk and at night, while externally lit signs soften the impact of signs in darkness.⁴⁶³

In a case in which environmental issues were important, Eller Media Co. v. City of Tucson,⁴⁶⁴ the court summarily rejected a free speech objection to an ordinance that required top-mounted rather than bottom-mounted lights on billboards. This requirement was intended to reduce light emissions into the night sky that might unreasonably interfere with astronomical observations. The city claimed that top-mounted lights emitted fewer rays into the night sky because their rays shined downward on at least one surface before radiating upward. The court held the regulation did not affect communicative speech because it did not affect the advertising message displayed on the billboards.

A Kansas case assumed it affected communicative speech but upheld under the Central Hudson criteria an ordinance that authorized searchlights as a special use for no more the ten days.⁴⁶⁵ The court held that high-powered searchlights visible for a distance of 30 to 40 miles, and used for promotional purposes, obviously attracted the attention of persons not on the premises. The city had made a reasonable judgment that the regulation promoted traffic safety and improved the city's aesthetic appearance. A lesser regulation would not serve those interests, and the ⁴⁶¹ 628 A.2d 247 (N.H. 1993).

⁴⁶² Id. at 251.

⁴⁶³ Compare Church of the Open Door v Zoning Board of Appeals Town of Clinton, 1993 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1069 (Conn. Super. 1993 (upholding zoning regulations prohibiting use of illuminated signs other than indirectly illuminated signs as applied to sign on church property; also holding freedom of speech or religion not violated).

⁴⁶⁴ 7 P.3d 136 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2000).

⁴⁶⁵ Robert L. Rieke Bldg. Co. v. City of Overland Park, 657 P.2d 1121 (Kan. 1983).

limitation was no more extensive than necessary.

Neon lighting can be an attractive feature in some locations, but a municipality may decide it wants to limit it throughout the community or in certain areas. An Indiana court applied the Central Hudson criteria to uphold a ban on neon signs in a small tourist town where the ordinance cited the town's unique scenic and architectural characteristics and public safety concerns as reasons for its adoption.⁴⁶⁶ The court held the ban was no more extensive than necessary. It was neither prudent nor effective to limit neon signs to a particular area, and no type of neon lighting would be less distracting or less inconsistent with the town's aesthetic image. Reasonable alternatives were available, such as ground-lighted signs that would not contrast with the community's aesthetic character.

A New Jersey trial court held that a ban on neon did not comply with all of the time, place, and manner requirements.⁴⁶⁷ The court found that the restrictions were justified without reference to content and that there were ample alternative channels for communication of the information but that the ban on neon did not serve a significant governmental interest.

The record was devoid of evidence, facts, or analysis showing that the mere existence of neon was offensive to the township's aesthetic goal, or that there were unusual problems in the use of neon that could not be regulated as other forms of lighting, such as by regulating degree of illumination or the amount of light used within a given space or size of structure. It was not apparent that a complete elimination of one form of lighting would have any impact on the undesirable "highway" look of the town. "There is no evidence that neon is, in and of itself, inconsistent with careful design or tasteful presentation of advertisements, the general goal of aesthetic restrictions."

§ 5:7. Numerical Restrictions

Sign ordinances may limit the number of signs on a property, assign numerical limits for signs on walls or facades, or provide a numerical ratio for signs based on street frontage or facade. Courts usually uphold numerical limits by applying either the Central Hudson criteria or the time, place, and manner regulation rules.⁴⁶⁸

⁴⁶⁶ Wallace v. Brown County Area Plan Comm'n, 689 N.E.2d 491 (Ind. Ct. App. 1998).

⁴⁶⁷ State v. Calabria, Gillette Liquors, 693 A.2d 949 (N.J. L. Div. 1997)..

⁴⁶⁸ Baldwin Park Free Speech Coalition v. City of Baldwin Park, 2021 WL 4846059, at *7 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 18, 2021); B & B Coastal Enterprises, Inc. v. Demers, 276 F. Supp. 2d 155 (D. Me. 2003) (one sign for each pump and for other

The cases recognize that numerical limits on signs balance the need to provide information with the need to protect aesthetic and traffic safety interests. A federal district court in B & B Coastal Enterprises, Inc. v. Demers,⁴⁶⁹ for example, applied the Central Hudson criteria to uphold a sign ordinance that allowed one sign for each pump and one sign for other products sold by gasoline stations. The court held that the town had decided to make important consumer information known but had properly limited the display of information in accordance with its other interests. It held that these aesthetic and safety interests were substantial, and that “limiting the number of signs per lot materially advances the common-sense judgments of the local lawmakers that an excessive number of signs may pose a hazard to traffic safety and detracts from the visual attractiveness of this tourist-town.”⁴⁷⁰ By controlling the size and appearance of signs rather than prohibiting them entirely, the town used less restrictive means for meeting safety and aesthetic concerns.⁴⁷¹

§ 5.8. Setback Requirements

Sign ordinances usually require on-premises signs to be set back a specified distance from a property line or street. Courts uphold setbacks as valid time, place, and manner regulations.⁴⁷² product sold by gasoline stations, Central Hudson criteria met); Bender v. City of Saint Ann, 816 F. Supp. 1372 (E.D. Mo. 1993) (one wall sign per business, corner lots could have one on each street fronting wall, Central Hudson criteria met), aff'd on other grounds, 36 F.3d 57 (8th Cir. 1994); Williams v. City & County of Denver, 622 P.2d 542 (Colo. 1981) (three sign limit per street front, plus one additional sign for each 100 feet of street frontage in excess of 200 feet, upheld as valid time, place and manner restriction); Township of Pennsauken v. Schad, 733 A.2d 1159 (N.J. 1999) (limit of two business signs in C-1 district and four in C-2 district, met Central Hudson criteria and time, place and manner rules); Singer Supermarkets, Inc. v. Zoning Bd. Of Adjustment, 443 A.2d 1082 (N.J. App. 1982) (only one sign allowed on front façade of a business, Central Hudson criteria met); Temple Baptist Church v. City of Albuquerque, 646 P.2d 565 (N.M. 1982) (unspecified but limited to the minimum number of signs necessary for identification purposes, upheld as valid time, place and manner regulation).

⁴⁶⁹ 276 F. Supp. 2d 155 (D. Me. 2003).

⁴⁷⁰ Id. at 165.

⁴⁷¹ In Rhodes v. Gwinnett County, 557 F. Supp. 30 (N.D. Ga. 1982), the court struck down a sign ordinance that allowed “[o]ne business or institution identification sign on the premises of the permitted business or institution.” The county did not offer any evidence that it adopted this provision because of a concern with traffic or safety. Even if it had, there was no limit on the size of signs, so any single sign was permitted no matter how large or how offensive or distracting it was. The ordinance also prohibited additional signs no matter how attractive or inconspicuous they were.

⁴⁷² King Enters. V. Thomas Twp., 215 F. Supp. 2d 891 (E.D. Mich. 2002) (various setback requirements); Donrey Communications Co. v. City of Fayetteville, 660 S.W.2d 900 (Ark. 1983) (setback requirements for freestanding signs); State v. Spano, 966 N.E.2d 908, 914 (Ohio. Ct. App. 2011) (special event signs must be more than five feet from the street line). See also Marathon Outdoor, LLC v. Vesconti, 107 F. Supp. 2d 355, 366 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (signs within 15 feet of street must be less than 30 feet in height).

An Ohio case⁴⁷³ is typical. It upheld an ordinance requiring special event signs to be more than five feet from a property or street line. The regulation was content-neutral because it was not directed at suppressing any particular type of speech. It did not prevent the plaintiff from advertising or selling cars at his dealership but merely restricted the size and placement of signs for special events. It was a reasonable time, place, and manner regulation because “[t]he government has an interest in controlling the size and placement of special event signs for reasons of both safety and aesthetics.”⁴⁷⁴

⁴⁷³ State v. Spano, 966 N.E.2d 908 (Ohio Ct. App. 2011).

⁴⁷⁴ Id. at 914.