SCHOLARSHIP

Although my primary research interest is the study of faculty, my scholarly focus combines several sub-areas under the umbrella of marginal and marginalized groups and institutions. Within the study of faculty, I examine the experiences of professors at faith-based institutions, non-tenure track faculty, and faculty denied tenure. Studying the individual experiences and organizational implications of college student food insecurity is also a central focus. Secondary foci include college access for rural low income students, issues related to the integration of faith and learning and faith-based higher education, the roots of the student personnel movement within the collegiate YMCA student associations, and the impact of campus spaces on organizational functioning and meaning making. Across all of these topics my approach tends to be qualitative in method and sociological in perspective.
