Objectives of the Seminar

The objectives of this course are: (1) to understand the scope and breadth of the theoretical literature that has defined the study of international relations; (2) to identify the strengths and weaknesses of the theoretical paradigms represented in that literature; (3) to define specific research questions and issues that must be addressed by future research; and (4) to prepare students for preliminary examinations in international relations.

It is, of course, impossible to provide a comprehensive review of the entire field of international relations in a single semester. The readings and discussions in this course seek to strike a balance between traditional works that define the evolution of the field and contemporary works that highlight the development of our knowledge and possible directions for future research. Some of the materials in this course rely on technical tools (such as econometrics or formal theory). Students are not expected to be familiar with these tools prior to enrolling in the course, but will become familiar with them during the semester.

Course Requirements

Commentaries (20% of final grade): In order to encourage active thinking about the readings and discussion in class, students will write two brief commentaries (2 pages maximum, single-spaced) on the readings for a particular week. Students should seek in these notes to engage one or more themes in the works, discuss their strengths and weaknesses, and suggest future research questions facing that area of the literature. Students will sign up for their weeks at the first class meeting of the seminar. The papers will be circulated electronically to the entire class, and will be due at 9:00 a.m. on the relevant class day. You can post the paper to the class through the Carmen website.

Class Participation (10% of the final grade): Students will be expected to come to class fully prepared to engage in a robust, informed discussion of the readings and the problems for the field of international relations raised by the readings. On weeks when students do not provide a commentary paper, students will submit brief (max. 2 paragraphs) written response to the week's reading and/or discussion that describes an original research question related to the week's topic and a possible strategy for testing. These response papers should be submitted to me via Carmen message. Response papers will not be graded but will count toward the participation score.

Literature or Book Review (25% of the final grade): The readings on this syllabus can only serve as a starting point from which students will engage additional important literature. Students will therefore write a literature or book review on a topic of interest to them that relates to one of the subjects addressed by this course. A book review will generally focus intensively on one or two related books; a literature review will examine the development of a theme or problem through time and a larger number of readings. Either type of analysis should be 4,000-5,000 words. Students should consult with the instructors before selecting a review topic. Literature and book reviews that may serve as models for such forms of scholarship are listed at the end of this syllabus.

Written Final Examination (25% of the final grade): Students will take a one-day at-home examination that will be patterned on the preliminary examinations that graduate students must pass before they may advance to the dissertation stage of the PhD program.

Oral Exam Final (20% of the final grade): As with the preliminary exam process, students will be given a brief oral exam via zoom with the course instructor. The oral exam may focus on issues raised in the written exam, but any material on the syllabus may be covered during the exam.

Academic Misconduct Policy: It is the responsibility of the Committee on Academic Misconduct to investigate or establish procedures for the investigation of all reported cases of student academic misconduct. The term “academic misconduct” includes all forms of student academic misconduct wherever committed; illustrated by, but not limited to, cases of plagiarism and dishonest practices in connection with examinations. Instructors shall report all instances of alleged academic misconduct to the committee (Faculty Rule 3335-5-487). For additional information, see the Code of Student Conduct.

Accommodations for Students with Disabilities:

Students with disabilities that have been certified by the Office for Disability Services will be appropriately accommodated and should inform the instructor as soon as possible of their needs. The Office for Disability Services is located in 098 Baker Hall 113 W. 12th Ave. Columbus, OH 43210. Telephone: 614-292-3307. For exam accommodations email: slds-exam@osu.edu.

Required Texts

Students need not purchase any books for this course. All required readings are available through the course Carmen page or through OSU academic databases. Readings with hyperlinks are available in OSU databases. All other readings may be found on the course Carmen page.
