Lindsay Rettig is a grain marketing specialist at Kalmbach Feeds, Inc. She has over 9 years of professional experience in the grain industry. Her passion is in building relationships with producers and furthering their grain marketing knowledge. In addition to that, she manages the hedging position and assists in risk management in her current role. Lindsay graduated from The Ohio State University in 2014 and has series III and series 30 trading licenses. She and her husband have a grain farm in Arlington, Ohio, and love keeping their two children, ages 3 and 1, as involved as possible with the farm.

Dr. Nevil Speer works as an industry consultant based in Bowling Green, Kentucky. He has experience in both academia and private industry working in the livestock and food industry. His career includes working with several start-ups along with various service and consultation projects spanning a wide variety of topics. In addition, he has authored several influential industry white papers and currently serves as a regular contributor to Drovers.

Dr. Speer holds a PhD in Animal Sciences from Colorado State University and an MBA from Western Kentucky University.

A panel from Farm Credit of Mid-America will lead a discussion to help attendees better understand price target goals. They will cover balance sheets, enterprise budgets, and working with your lender. The panel will consist of:

- Colin Gordon – Senior Financial Officer
- Seth Wilkerson – Senior Financial Officer
- Evan Hahn – Regional Vice President

Lindsey Schwinn, Insurance Officer, and Andrea Fogle, Crop Insurance Account Specialist from Farm Credit will provide participants with an overview of crop insurance options for 2024. They will guide participants through the thought process in selecting the best risk management options for their operation.
