

ON THE JOB JUNE 5 & 12, 2017 ISSUE

THE WORK YOU DO, THE PERSON YOU ARE

The pleasure of being necessary to my parents was profound. I was not like the children in folktales: burdensome mouths to feed.

By Toni Morrison

May 29, 2017

Illustration by Christoph Niemann

All I had to do for the two dollars was clean Her house for a few hours after school. It was a beautiful house, too, with a plastic-covered sofa and chairs, wall-to-wall blue-and-white carpeting, a white enamel stove, a washing machine and a dryer—things that were common in Her neighborhood, absent in mine. In the middle of the war, She had butter, sugar, steaks, and seam-up-the-back stockings.

I knew how to scrub floors on my knees and how to wash clothes in our zinc tub, but I had never seen a Hoover vacuum cleaner or an iron that wasn't heated by fire.

Part of my pride in working for Her was earning money I could squander: on movies, candy, paddleballs, jacks, ice-cream cones. But a larger part of my pride was based on the fact that I gave half my wages to my mother, which meant that some of my earnings were used for real things—an insurance-policy payment or what was owed to the milkman or the iceman. The pleasure of being necessary to my parents was profound. I was not like the children in folktales: burdensome mouths to feed, nuisances to be corrected, problems so severe that they were abandoned to the forest. I had a status that doing routine chores in my house did not provide—and it earned me a slow smile, an approving nod from an adult. Confirmations that I was adultlike, not childlike.

Read More of Toni Morrison's writing in The New Yorker.

In those days, the forties, children were not just loved or liked; they were needed. They could earn money; they could care for children younger than themselves; they could work the farm, take care of the herd, run errands, and much more. I suspect that children aren't needed in that way now. They are loved, doted on, protected, and helped. Fine, and yet . . .

Little by little, I got better at cleaning Her house—good enough to be given more to do, much more. I was ordered to carry bookcases upstairs and, once, to move a piano from one side of a room to the other. I fell carrying the bookcases. And after pushing the piano my arms and legs hurt so badly. I wanted to refuse, or at least to complain, but I was afraid She would fire me, and I would lose the freedom the dollar gave me, as well as the standing I had at home—although both were slowly being eroded. She began to offer me her clothes, for a price. Impressed by these worn things, which looked simply gorgeous to a little girl who had only two dresses to wear to school, I bought a few. Until my mother asked me if I really wanted to work for castoffs. So I learned to say “No, thank you” to a faded sweater offered for a quarter of a week's pay.

Still, I had trouble summoning the courage to discuss or object to the increasing demands She made. And I knew that if I told my mother how unhappy I was she would tell me to quit. Then one day, alone in the kitchen with my father, I let drop a few whines about the job. I gave him details, examples of what troubled me, yet although he listened intently, I saw no sympathy in his eyes. No “Oh, you poor little thing.” Perhaps he understood that what I wanted was a solution to the job, not an escape from it. In any case, he put down his cup of coffee and said, “Listen. You don't live there. You live here. With your people. Go to work. Get your money. And come on home.”

That was what he said. This was what I heard:

1. Whatever the work is, do it well—not for the boss but for yourself.
2. You make the job; it doesn't make you.
3. Your real life is with us, your family.
4. You are not the work you do; you are the person you are.

I have worked for all sorts of people since then, geniuses and morons, quick-witted and dull, bighearted and narrow. I've had many kinds of jobs, but since that conversation with my father I have never considered the level of labor to be the measure of myself, and I have never placed the security of a job above the value of home. ♦

MORE IN THIS SERIES

The Countess's Private Secretary.
By Jennifer Egan

Brush Clearing with Teen-Age Boys in Arkansas
By Richard Ford

Business or Pleasure
By Chris Ware

The Hardworking Immigrant Who Made Good
By Akhil Sharma

Published in the print edition of the June 5 & 12, 2017, issue.

NEW YORKER FAVORITES

- The night-club star who became a spy.
- A film that rethinks identity and testosterone.

- Extending your own life expectancy is deeply selfish. By all means, do it.
- The dark purpose behind a town constable's journal.
- Lessons on male insecurity from Walt Whitman's health column.
- "Go Ask Alice" sold millions of copies. Its true provenance was a secret.
- Personal History by André Aciman: conversations with my deaf mother.

Sign up for our daily newsletter to receive the best stories from The New Yorker.

Toni Morrison, who died in August, 2019, was the author of twelve novels. She received the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1993.

More: Children Cleaning Fathers Jobs Work

THIS WEEK'S ISSUE

Never miss a big New Yorker story again. Sign up for This Week's Issue and get an e-mail every week with the stories you have to read.

E-mail address

Your e-mail address

Sign up

By signing up, you agree to our User Agreement and Privacy Policy & Cookie Statement.

Read More

WORK FOR HIRE

LABORS

WORK FOR HIRE

BE KIND TO PEOPLE DRESSED AS FOOD

In the late eighties, my job involved going out in public dressed as a tuxedoed dairy product. Children ran from me.

DAILY-SHOUTS

YOUR PERSONALITY, EXPLAINED BY YOUR ANNOYING HOUSEHOLD HABITS

You leave a swig of orange juice in the bottle because you're too busy with your own life to think about anyone else's.

By Nicole Rose Whitaker

ON-AND-OFF-THE-AVENUE

A GUIDE TO GETTING RID OF ALMOST EVERYTHING

Once you've thanked and said goodbye to the items that do not spark joy, what can you do with them?

By Patricia Marx

Cookies Settings