Tuesday, May 5: PCORI The Changing Role of Telehealth

Telehealth use has surged dramatically during the pandemic as clinicians use various platforms to consult with a wide variety of patients. State and federal authorities have temporarily lifted many regulatory restrictions to telehealth even as public and private insurers have expanded reimbursement. Yet the rapid shifts have posed challenges even for systems that had previously created robust telehealth programs. In this PCORI-hosted webinar series, clinicians in charge of two such programs will share lessons learned and discuss prospects for ongoing use and growth of telehealth after the current public health emergency.

Speakers

Todd Czartoski, Chief Medical Technology Officer and Chief Executive of Telehealth, Providence St. Joseph Health

Judd Hollander, Senior Vice President for Healthcare Delivery Innovation, Thomas Jefferson University, and Associate Dean for Strategic Health Initiatives, Sidney Kimmel Medical College
