Student Spotlight - Evan Eising

Evan Eising is a University of Wisconsin-Madison graduate and a second year MPP student at Harris. After graduating from University of Wisconsin-Madison, he worked at a company that focused on building and implementing hospital revenue cycle software. This experience piqued Evan's interest in the U.S. healthcare system while simultaneously focusing on his data and software skills. He continued to build upon his technical skills while being a product manager later at a marketing data firm. Prior to going to Harris, Evan worked at Village MD where he helped launch primary care clinics in local Walgreens. Through this opportunity, he was able to combine his interest in healthcare, value-based care, and data analytics.

Evan chose Harris to further his understanding in government relations and policies regarding healthcare. Harris allowed him to apply his data skillset to crucial policy questions. Evan was interested in GPHAP to find a community at University of Chicago with like-minded people across various disciplines. While juggling GPHAP and Harris courses, Evan is currently interning at the Government Accountability Office \(GAO\), on their healthcare team, focusing primarily on Medicaid.
